Fac. Senate votes to cease contact with S. Africa

By ANGELA BROWN

The UMass faculty senate voted to end official contact with South Africa, prohibiting the expenditure of University funds for scholarly work in that country, in the climax of the controversy which has beset UMass since Botany professor Robert Wilce's participation in a South African conference became publicized last February. The resolution also prohibits any scholar from officialy representing the University in South Africa, whether at a government, college or university-sponsored activity in the racially oppressive nation. The motion was made by Afro-American Studies professor Chester Davis, followed by a presentation and discussion.

Graduate student and CCEBMS staff member Bheki Langa, originally from Durbin, South Africa, addressed the question of why the country must be singled out for such actions, saying "South Africa is very unique among nations...apartheid (racial segregation) is part of the Law." He noted that the U.N. has voted overwhelmingly to condemn the South African regime.

South Africa should not be clouded over by the view that through "constructive engagement" South Africans would be "coerced to change their policies... or persuaded to change their policies." Rather, he said, "from experience...South Africa gets emboldened when the U.S. takes steps to accomodate the regime." He said that in the period since 1968, as U.S investment in the nation doubled, the regime has grown more repressive and the "pass laws" more stringent.

Langa concluded by urging the senate to "join an overwhelming majority around the world" through severing relations with South Africa, a nation he said represents "something unique...since Hitler came to power." He also stated that the vote could be taken as a "test for race relations in this country." Langa's address was met with enthusiastic applause from the audience of senators, other faculty and students.

During the discussion, one senator voiced concern over the resolution's possible threat to "academic freedom," an issue which has been the main argument in support of Professor Wilce's university-funded trip to South Africa. After affirming his support of the sentiment of the resolution, he went on to question its impact. He noted that when Professor Wilce returned from the conference, he was "roundly criticized in the local press," and was " very much shaken by what he saw (in South Africa)."

"I think it was worth every penny of the six hundred dollars," he added.

The professor argued that "Our absolute right to...(academic) exchange is sacred."

In response, Professor Davis reiterated that no professor would be restricted from personal contact with the country, but said that the University should not sponsor the exchange. "We are dealing with a country...the civilized world has declared is committing crimes against humanity," he said, concluding "academic freedom" is not "something floating above the rest of society."

During the discussion Dean William Darity related his experience when travelling through South Africa to Botswana. As an Afro-American person he was not allowed to take a tour through the city of Johannesburg, but was detained in the Johannesburg airport "quarters" overnight until he left the country.

Implementing the senate's decision will require the consideration of departments across the campus, according to professor Davis. "Every unit on campus will have to look at its policy in this regard," he said. The Faculty senate's action completes the round of sanctions taken by most university-related bodies, including the undergraduate and graduate senates.

Confederate flags disassociated from Ole Miss

By TRACEY BRYANT

In front of a dormitory with Confederate flags waving from upper windows, in a news conference on April 21, Lydia Spragin, president of the University of Mississippi's Black Student Union called Chancellor Porter L. Fortune Jr.'s April 20 announcement revoking the Confederate flag as the University's unofficial symbol, weak and incomplete, yet "a beginning."

Spragin said that it is only one of 13 demands for change made by the University's Black students. An increase in Black faculty members and Black administrators; a Black studies program; funds for Black cultural programs; the hiring of a Black affirmative action officer; and a general increase in financial aid, a demand also supported by the white students, were among the requests.

In his announcement the chancellor said that the school would no longer purchase approximately 9,000 small Confederate flags to be handed out at football games and pep rallies, nor display the flag at official school functions, but that he could not legally ban an individual from displaying the flag.

Spragin reminded the audience that Fortune had not addressed other Black demands, such as prohibiting the use of the school's Colonel Rebel cartoon mascot and the singing of "Dixie" at school events which with many other things Black students find very alienating. She also said the chancellor had not specified whether the campus bookstore would continue to sell the flags which most Black students consider to b a symbol of racism, the Ku Klux Klan and university indifference to their exigencies.

Up until the announcement, Rebel flags had been selling very quickly, and on April 18 over 1,000 white students paraded through campus and marched on a Black fraternity house. The National Leader's Charles Griffin, reports that the white demonstrators were yelling "nigger night" and "save the flag" as they marched on Phi Beta Sigma house.

It is rumored that the Klan will march in Oxford and that the march on the fraternity house was in response to objections made by Black students to pictures of robed Klansmen in the recently published Ole Miss yearbook; which Spragin, the outgoing president of the Black Student Union feels glamorized the Klan and intimidated Black students.

Danny Love, a 21-year-old Black student who was inside the frat house surrounded by white students, said that he was scared, that the white students shouted racial epithets and waved Rebel flags. While Ed Meek, the university's white Public Relations director called the April 18 march "nothing but a pep rally", Steve Millner, a Black sociology professor at the university said that the white protestors were a "mob" and their "behavior befitted the scum of the South," reported the National Leader.

Millner stated, "Hundreds of drunken yahoos and Southern belles used the tyranny of the mobs in their latest efforts to reinforce the notion that the Ole Miss way remains the Klan-tainted flag way," according to the Leader which further quoted Millner as saying, "The members of the Phi Beta Sigma who witness their house surrounded by these fiend-like trashers, have been forcefully reminded of the tactics that once terrorized Mississippi's Blacks."

Officials also conceded the seriousness of the problem: "I don't think there is anything more significant this school has done in the way of race relations since it admitted James Meredith in 1963," said David Sansing, a U of Miss. history professor, of the school's shedding of the flag. He and others agreed the move was a beginning in breaking down psychological barriers to the full integration of the school, barriers as formidable as the legal ones that existed before Meredith's admission sparked rioting and two deaths.

Many white students felt that the flag is more a part of the school's tradition than a symbol of racism and hate, yet, the flag has been associated with the university throughout a murky history. According to Professor Sansing, the school, founded in the mid-1840's, formed a well-known Civil War unit, called the University Greys. Because it fought under the Confederate flag, the flag became associated with the school, though never officially. This continued in the 1950'd when the university initially bought and distributed the flags and in other ways fostered the Stars and Bars association with Ole Miss' then nationally known football team, to build team spirit and gain audience support.

Mothers honored in Family Day

By SEGUN EUBANKS

Johnetta Cole, in her keynote address for CCEBMS Family Day, Sunday May 8, gave a tribute to the struggles of Third World Women. In honor of Mothers Day, which coincided with Family Day, she said that the best gift Third World students can give to their mothers is to continue the tradition of struggle for a "decent education" that will not only get you a job but will help to "know who you are."

Ms. Cole said that Third World women suffer more than any other group of people because they are subjected to the "triple oppression" of racism, sexism, and class oppression. She stated that "Racism and sexism is terribly profitable," because they create a pool of cheap labor in the job market and free labor in the home. She stressed that the oppression of Asian, Hispanic, Native American, and other women of color are all tied to in to the same struggle. She dispelled the "myth of Asian Americans having made it" in America by comparing the differences in the conditions of Asians to that of whites, and noting the similarities with the oppressive conditions of other Third World people.

Ms. Cole's main theme was that "Whenever there is opression there is also resistance." She quoted famous Black nationalist Martin Delaney who said "To know the position of a people it is only necessary to know the condition of their women." She paid tribute to the millions of Third World women who have been the "invisible women of struggle." The strength of Third World women in struggle was brought to light by Ms. cole's strong oratory.

Women of color have always been the primary early socializers of their children throughout our history in America. Such women are "the transmitters of culture" and "The socializers of resistance," said Cole. She talked about the long history of Black women having to work out of necessity inside the home without the use of "easy-vac cleaners" and outside the home in the lowest grade jobs with the lowest pay. She answered the question of why women of color have worked so hard: "Any Third World woman will tell you," Cole said, "I do it for my children and the children of my people." Ms. Cole paid tribute to the creativity of Third World women and to women such as Rosa Parks, Mary McCloud Bethuen, Angela Davis and others who contributed to the organized struggle of people of color.

Ms. Cole concluded her address by saying that today's Third World women remain strong role models by stressing the importance of a good education and being "the professors of our youth." In days when most white parents are struggling for computers in the classroom, Black parents are "struggling for erasers in the classroom" Ms. Cole said. Ms. Cole's address, which ended with a challenge to Third World students to learn from and appreciate the efforts and sacrifices of their mothers, fathers, and grandparents, met not only with a standing ovation, but left the audience of parents and students with a much deeper understanding and appreciation of what Family Day and Mothers Day is all about.

CCEBMS holds Family Day activities

The Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and Minority Students (CCEBMS) held its annual Family Day activities Sunday, concluding a busy weekend during which the Malcolm X picnic and the Funkathon were also given. Approximately 400 people, including students, families, and friends, were in attendence. The event included speeches, a luncheon, and an awards ceremony. Donna Davis gave the "student perspective" and Anthropology Professor, and outgoing Associate Provost, Johnetta Cole gave the keynote speech (see story this issue). All in all, it was a great time of celebration!

Below are listed the names of CCEBMS students who were recognized for their academic achievement and perseverance on this special occasion. Many students, it was noted, are going on to graduate school, exciting jobs, and special felowship programs. Hopefully, they will serve as an inspiration.

The Seta Rampersad Scholarship Fund

The Seta Rampersad Scholarship Fund was formed in 1982 as a memorial to Seta Rampersad, a 20-year-old Third World woman who was an undergraduate at the University of Massachusetts. Seta, a political science major and senior was found dead in Motel 6 in South Deerfield on September 13, 1978.

Seta was the daughter of immigrant parents who came from Trinidad. Seta, if she had lived, would have received her degree in May, 1979. Her career goals included being a legal advocate for Hispanic and Black youths who had been convicted in Springfield.

Recipients of the Seta Rampersad Scholarship must be Third World women undergraduates who have shown a history of commitment to social change in their communities, especially in the areas of health, women's issues, legal reform, Third World organizations, anti-nuke and international solidarity struggles.

Scholarships will be awarded to 2 Third World women undergraduates who have demonstrated good academic work (2.5 cum) and who have shown a sincere devotion to social progress. The award will be $300 and applications are due June 1, 1983 for the fall semester.

For more information and applications call Malika Jones at Everywoman's Center, 545-0883.

Duffey announces honorary degree recipients

By GLEN GOLDSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Seeking a notable cross-section of honorary degree recipients, University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey has announced that former Governor. Edward J. King and Richard J. Mahoney, president and chief operating officer of Monsanto Co., will be among six persons honored at the University's 113th commencement ceremonies.

"Gov. King was one of the first Massachusetts officials who recognized the role of the University in the economic development of the state," Duffey said. "He is one of the many recommended people of real achievement."

Duffey commented on Mahoney's position at Monsanto, a company that has been assailed in the past because of alleged environmental and safety violations.

"He (Mahoney) is now paying for the sins of Monsanto's past presidents," Duffey said.

Mahoney, a 1955 graduate of UMass, is a leader in the clean-up of industrial waste, Duffey said.

The University will also present honorary degrees to:

- Eleanor Holmes Norton, a human rights activist. She will present the commencement address.

Norton, a friend of Duffey's from her days in President Carter's administration, served as Chair of the New York City Commission on Human Rights from 1970-1977 and was Executive Assistant to Mayor John V. Lindsay during his term. She received her B.A. from Antioch College.

- Mikio Arie, president of Hokkaido University, Japan.
- Edward M. Fouhy, a 1956 graduate of the University. Fouhy is ABC News vice president and Washington bureau chief.
- John Brooks Slaughter, chancellor of the University of Maryland.

Christopher Cook, a graduating economics major was selected to speak from a field of graduating students who submitted speeches to the Student Affairs Office.

More than 4900 students will be eligible to graduate, according to Assistant Director of Community Relations, Cheryl Walsh. Attendance by seniors at graduation usually averages 86 to 87 percent.

The commencement will take place at 10 a.m. on May 10 at Alumni Stadium.

Seniors should pick up their caps and gowns at the Textbook Annex. There will be some caps and gowns available at the stadium on graduation day for students who are coming back to campus for commencement, Walsh said.

The cost of the caps, gowns, and diploma are paid for from a $30 fee paid by each senior.

EPA 'whistleblower' charges many worse than Love Canal

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The Love Canal, N.Y. toxic waste dump which attracted national attention in 1978, kicking off the first widespread public examination of such sites, was not the worst case in the nation, the state, or even the local county, according to the federal "whistleblower" who fought to bring recognition to it.

EPA official Hugh Kaufman speaking last night.

The case of chemical contamination which led the federal government to spend millions of dollars to buy out many homeowners in the town was chosen partly because of the attractiveness of the town's name, said Hugh Kaufman assistant director of the Hazardous Site Control Division of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Kaufman, who addressed an audience of 200 last night at the University of Massachusetts on the nation's "Great Toxic Waste Scandal," was at the center of controversy when administrator Anne Burford and 13 other EPA officials resigned this year following allegations of mismanagement and political misuse of agency funds which he claimed could be traced to the White House.

Having been with the EPA since its inception by President Nixon in 1971, Kaufman is one of the authors of the $1.6 billion Superfund passed by Congress to begin immediate cleanup of toxic waste dumps while any industry responsible is determined in court.

Of the 15,000 now identified chemical waste dumps in the country, half are worse than that in Love Canal, Kaufman said. Those more serious include the "S Area" dump in Niagara Falls, N.Y., into which he said the Hooker Chemical Company dumped the same chemicals as Love Canal, but which are now flowing into local water supplies.

Although admitting its relative unimportance in comparison to the nation's estimated 50,000 toxic dumps, Kaufman defended his strong involvement with Love Canal as the needed "case that the American people cut their teeth on" in hazardous waste.

In December 1982, Kaufman said he came under investigation by the EPA's Inspector General's Office in attempt to silence his criticisms of the agency, Kaufman said. He said the investigation included surveillance of his personal life similar to tactics he claimed Reagan used on political enemies while governor of California.

As a result, Kaufman said he began his own investigation which produced the allegations which led to the resignations, including the use of the Superfund for political purposes and "sweetheart deals" with corporate polluters.

However, Kaufman said he "would not recommend to anyone to be a whistleblower," unless it is "a situation where lives are at stake."

Activities director says SATF lawsuit is not beneficial

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The director of the University of Massachusetts Student Activities Office (SAO) said efforts by Student Government leaders to sue the SAO for control of the Student Activities Trust Fund would result in a "sad situation."

"If we get to a court of law then I think everyone loses," said director Randy Donant. "I don't think we've exercised all the available alternatives to court."

Donant said alternatives to a shift included "professional mediation" and "the University clarifying the roles we all have legally." But former SGA president Jim Murphy disagreed.

"We offered to negotiate the whole thing. Donant said no," Murphy said.

Office of Third World Affairs Director Tony Crayton worked out a mediation process last summer to straighten out disputes concerning ultimate control of SATF monies, and Donant refused to consider it, Murphy said.

In a memo to Murphy dated September 2, 1982, Donant proposed that "a series of Task Forces be created with specific assignments which would explored areas of concern and make recommendations."

But Donant has never followed up on that proposal, Murphy said.

According to both Donant and student leaders, the University has never written down the exact powers and limitations that the SAO and SGA have in regard to SATF monies.

Bruce Levy, assistant to the SGA President, said the SGA has been holding the threat of a suit as a final resort for a long time.

"Under (former SGA President Richard) LaVoice (1979 to 1981), we talked about suing for control, but we didn't have enough of a case," Levy said.

Murphy said evidence for a suit has increased since Donant has directed the office. He cited figures which show that while the office budget has increased $80,000 since 1981, the increase in salaries and benefits has been $105,000, "which means they are reallocating funds (from activities) to pay for personnel," Murphy said.

"I think it's safe to say that they've been extraordinarily irresponsible about budgeting," Murphy said.

Donant said that if student government leaders would "do their homework," they would see that "we're trying to be responsive and responsible as we can in our budget requests."

"There are some people who feel that the opinions of (SAO) staff are invalid and shouldn't be requested," Donant said. "I think the full-time staff have a lot of expertise and resources that they can provide to our student organizations,and none of them are encouraged to do so."

Donant said if the SGA sues, and wins, the funds will be handled inefficiently.

"I have to assume that the primary reason people come to this University is to matriculate and receive a degree," Donant said. "If students come to get involved in activities at the expense of that matriculation then I don't think they could handle (the SATF)."

"If we would spend as much time now (on issues like racism and sexism) as we are on this control issue, then I think the credibility of student government would increase," Donant said.

Murphy had similar observations about the University administration. "I think it's a sad state of affairs when the administration is so insecure that it has to have its fingers in everything we do," he said.

IRS unveils dial-a-scofflaw plan

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service put computers to work dialing for dollars yesterday, dunning delinquent taxpayers by telephone in an effort to collect $27 billion owed the government.

"We won't harass anybody," said Rob Wilkerson, who is in charge of the pilot program in St. Louis. "But we do expect a promise to pay. If they comply, we'll never see their case again."

The phone calls will start at 8 a.m. and continue until 8 p.m. workdays and from 8 a.m until noon on Saturdays. If the computer gets a busy signal, it will automatically call back 30 minutes later. If no one answers, it will try again later in the day, Wilkerson said.

When someone answers, an IRS agent comes on the line to discuss payment.

Chrysler asks U.S. to skip stocks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chrysler Corp., back from near-oblivion with the help of federal loan guarantees, asked the government yesterday to pass up stock purchases promised in the loan agreement that could be worth up to $200 million in profits to the Treasury.

Word of the request for the government to return so-called warrants — promises for the stock buys — brought quick criticism from Sen. William Proxmire, a foe of the loan guarantee program in the first place.

Proxmire, the highest-ranking Democrat on the Senate Banking Committee, planned to send federal officials who deal with the matter "a letter urging that this request be firmly rejected," a committee aide said yesterday.

"It's outrageous," added the aide, Ken McLean, who is Democratic staff director for the committee.

Tylenol killings inspire new law

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) — Prompted by last year's Tylenol-cyanide deaths, the House yesterday passed legislation making it a federal crime to tamper with consumer products.

The bill was approved in a 292-0 vote. Similar legislation is pending in the Senate.

Under the legislation, anyone convicted of "maliciously tampering with consumer products" in a way that could result in injury or death could be sentenced up to life in prison.

In the Chicago area last year bottles of Tylenol, a popular over-the-counter painkiller, were opened, the capsules treated with cyanide, and the bottles returned to store shelves. Seven people died from taking the tainted capsules. The crimes are still unsolved.

Numerous copycat incidents were reported around the country in the wake of the Chicago poisonings.

The bill, which covers food, drugs, cosmetics, medical devices and certain other consumer products designed to be ingested or consumed, also provides penalties for making false claims that such products have been tampered with, and for threats and conspiracies to tamper.

Stern requests Hitler fraud charges

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Stern magazine yesterday asked prosecutors to file fraud charges against a star reporter who said he found Hitler's diaries. The magazine claimed the journalist "fell into the hands of a swindler" who cheated Stern out of millions of dollars.

The wife of reporter Gerd Heidemann vigorously denied the magazine's allegations, saying her husband had given Stern evidence the diaries were genuine and that his editors told him the evidence had been verified.

Stern, a Hamburg-based newsweekly, issued a statement yesterday saying publisher Henri Nannen had filed a complaint with the state prosecutor against Heidemann, Stern's top investigative reporter.

Under West German law, the prosecutor's office must investigate to determine whether any charges are warranted. The office made no comment Monday.

Strike of R.I. state employees averted but threat still exists

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — The threat of an immediate strike by half of Rhode Island's 22,000 unionized workers dissolved yesterday, but union officials said they would urge rejection of the state's final contract offer.

Officials of Council 94 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, who vowed to strike at midnight yesterday, said workers would remain on the job at least until ballots are counted Friday.

"We will strongly recommend they reject it," Richard R. DeOrsey, Council 94 executive director, said after four hours of on-again, off-again talks with state negotiators.

But Angelo E. Azzinaro, the state's chief negotiator, said he was encouraged by the union's decision to allow its members to consider the proposal.

Convict: "God will punish me" for killing boy in auto crash

FRAMINGHAM — Jailed 10 years for killing Robert Hathaway in an auto accident and for driving while drunk and under the legal drinking age, Deborah Patch says she thinks of the 20-year-old dead man every day.

"You read about things like this happening to other people but you never believe that it could happen to you," Miss Patch said in an interview published yesterday. "I'll have to live with this boy's death for the rest of my life."

"I think of him every day, even though I didn't know him personally. I am afraid God will punish me for what I did."

Miss Patch, 21, of Plymouth was sentenced two weeks ago in Plymouth Superior Court to the Massachusetts Correctional Institution, Framingham, for manslaughter and driving under the influence of alcohol.

Jury fails to reach verdict in motel brawl murder trial

CAMBRIDGE — Jurors failed to reach a verdict yesterday after a third day of deliberations in the trial of four Everett police officers charged with murdering a man after forcing their way into a Chelsea motel room last summer.

Judge Robert Barton excused the jury for the night at 4 p.m. after about six hours of deliberations and told them to report back to the Middlesex Superior Court room at 10 a.m. today.

Red Sox Valdez has innocent plea filed in statutory rape case

BOSTON — An innocent plea was entered yesterday for Boston Red Sox infielder Julio Valdez, charged with the statutory rape of a 14-year-old girl who reportedly told him she was 17.

Judge Richard Banks of Roxbury District Court continued Valdez' bail of $1,000 and set a May 24 date for the next court session in the case. Statutory rape is defined as having sexual relations with a female below the age of consent, which is 16 under Massachusetts law.

Valdez, a substitute second baseman and shortstop, was placed on the restricted list by the Red Sox, the club announced yesterday. The team called up second baseman Marty Barrett from the Pawtucket Red Sox of the International League to replace him on the roster.

Regents to pass entry criteria

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

After experiencing intense opposition and undergoing a series of rewrites and compromises, the Massachusetts Board of Regents is expected to pass today minimum admission standards for the thirteen public colleges and universities in the state.

Under the proposed guidelines, which will take effect in 1987, students wishing to attend a public four year post-secondary institution must have completed sixteen college preparatory courses and satisfy minimum levels of a combined SAT score and a weighted high school class rank based on a sliding scale.

"My expectation is that we will pass the admission standard next Tuesday," Regents Chairman James R. Martin said last Thursday at the University of Massachusetts' Faculty Senate meeting.

Major opposition to the plan was led by UMass President David C. Knapp who objected to the use of SAT's and class rank without a sliding scale. Knapp had contended that this would have discriminated against students from competitive high schools who do not have a good class rank but high SAT's. They would not have been accepted under the initial plan. Since the Regents incorporated the sliding scale, where students with low SAT's but a high class rank and vice versa can be admitted, Knapp has announced his support for the plan.

Under the proposal, certain categories of students would be exempt from the admissions guidelines. All older students, those entering college three years after they graduated high school; students with special needs that fall under chapter 766; educationally disadvantaged students, those students "who may be culturally disadvantaged with a primary language other than English" or who come from school districts with limited course offerings; and those students transferring from a two year community college will be exempt from the new standards.

In order to allay the fears of minority groups, who feel the new standards would bar low income minority students, the Regents will require all the public institutions to develop affirmative action plans to recruit minority students.

The plan will be adopted as an interim plan. The guidelines will be reviewed during its implementation, which will take four years, and changes will be made where needed, according to several members of the Regents staff.

Professor Tolhurst dead at 70

Funeral services were held yesterday for Dr. Gilbert C. Tolhurst, a communications disorders department professor and an authority on the acoustics of speech, who died after a short illness early Wednesday morning at Franklin County Hospital in Greenfield. He was 70.

A member of the University of Massachusetts faculty since 1971, Tolhurst also belonged to the Graduate Research Council until last year and had served on the Faculty Senate since 1978. He was elected as a Fellow in the American Psychological Association that same year after returning from a year-long Sabbatical Leave at the University of Florida at Gainesville.

A retired commander in the U.S. Naval Reserve Medical Service Corps, Tolhurst was the head of the Acoustic Laboratory at the U.S. School of Aviation Medicine, and did extensive research on problems of voice communications, experimental phonetics, hearing, and physical acoustics.

He was a member of the American Psychological Association, the Acoustical Society of America, the Aerospace Medical Association, the National Academy of Science, and many other scientific organizations. He published over 30 magazine articles and was an author of and contributor to four books concerning speech and hearing.

He graduated with a bachelor's degree from Weber College in Utah in 1934, received associate's and master's degrees at Brigham Young University in 1946, and received his Ph.D from the State University of Iowa in 1948.

He leaves a wife, Jeannette (Swenson) Tolhurst and two sons.

Female rookie cops enjoying equal treatment

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the last [in a two part series] focusing on women police officers.

Women rookie police officers at the University of Massachusetts feel they are judged not by their sex but by their ability to perform as competent police officers.

Unlike older women police officers who struggled for their equality less than 20 years ago, rookie police officer Linda Piorun, 38, said, "Sex doesn't enter into it. An officer is a respected position. There is not room for stereotyping."

Darlynne Dix, a recent graduate of the Springfield Police Academy and a product of regimental training, said women were not treated any differently from men at the academy.

"If you can't take their discipline then you can't take the street abuse. They pushed on our weak areas in order to strengthen them," she said.

Dix and Piorun are the two rookies in the department. They joined for different reasons and have different strengths but while on duty both said they regard themselves as officers not as women.

Piorun said, she was brought up to respect police officers.

"Unlike many kids today, when I was a child, people looked to the police for help. For this reason I regard my job as a public service not as law enforcement," she said.

A 1978 UMass food chemistry graduate, Piorun joined the force a year ago because her job as a laboratory technician for HP Hood and Son of Springfield did not provide contact with the public, something she said she enjoyed after eight years of volunteer work.

The police academy is the most regimental aspect of the job's training and is where the first dose of discipline is given.

"Because of such rigid training the men were not looking around and many did not realize I was a woman for weeks," Piorun said, referring to the three months she spent at the Massachusetts State Police Academy.

Dix, 21, could easily be mistaken for a student. She said she enjoys physical activity which has a lot to do with why she join the force.

"I wanted a non-stifling job, one that made me feel useful and gave me a purpose. So far I've been satisfied," she said.

Her family was against her becoming an officer, she said. "They worried about my safety. No parent wants to see their kid get hurt. They wanted me to have a regular safe job," she said.

Realizing Dix was serious about becoming an officer, her family became more supportive.

"No one's parents want them to choose a profession with obvious dangers," Dix said.

Dix took jobs that gave her experience in dealing with emergency situations including being an ambulance attendant and driver and a security guard before she entered the Springfield academy where she was one of six women in a class of 66.

Five Meeting articles passed

By MITCH ZEMEL
Collegian Staff

The fourth session of the Amherst Town Meeting convened last night, and in the first two hours, three articles were dismissed.

Articles 47 and 48, both of which deal with town elections, were dismissed for further consideration. The former deals with raising the number of signatures needed for nomination to town office from 10 to 50. The selectmen want to form a committee to look into the need to raise the number of signatures.

The latter deals with run-off elections in case there is not a minimum plurality achieved by the candidate with the most votes.

Also dismissed was the establishment of a Tuition Revolving Account. The School Committee recommended dismissal of this article because the Finance Committee informed them that the money could be taken from the town reserve fund.

In two separate articles, $41,000 was appropriated for Water Department programs.

In one of these articles, $11,000 was appropriated to purchase a tapping machine. This machine can drill holes in a water main without the water being shut off. Another $5000 was appropriated for a tractor mower so that grass can be mowed around fire hydrants, reservoirs, and treatment plants.

In the other article, $25,000 was appropriated for the reconstruction of existing water mains on Harkness Road and Lincoln Avenue. This reconstruction is to be coordinated with street repairs so that the roads need not be torn apart twice. Three thousand dollars was appropriated for tuition assistance in the Wildwood After School program. This article was postponed last week.

Three articles dealing with tax exemptions were also passed. The first was a $500 property tax exemption for the blind. The town currently grants this exemption to 12 property owners. The additional cost to the town is expected to be $750.

The second raised the minimum income and assets limits for a $500 property tax exemption for the elderly. This article increases the number of elderly eligible for the exemption.

The last deals with an exemption from the motor vehicle excise tax for former prisoners of war. Although the Finance Committee felt that this program contains some ambiguities, they recommended passage of the article. Thirty-two other states have already passed this program.

Rock 'n' roll is bad for the soul

Repent ye sinners and pass the hat, gospel music is where its at Rock and Roll will never die, but all in all, it's just a lie
So close your eyes and close your ears;
the music of God is what you should hear
Zeppelin, Stones, and heavy metal — all they are is the work of the devil
First the sex and then the drugs and now it's rock and roll
Bad for the body and for the mind, but worse, they'll steal your soul!

Well, now I've heard everything. Last week at a "fact-filled mini-seminar that included tapes and concert footage," I was forced to endure, straightfaced, the most absurd, proselytizing gibberish I've ever heard. Sponsored by (but not necessarily responsible for) the New Testament Fellowship, an RSO group, this "seminar" promised to reveal the "startling truth" about that "somebody who is trying to brainwash you through your stereo or cassete recorder." The poster showed a picture of Jim Morrison and said, "No one here gets out alive."

"It's only rock and roll, or is it?" the poster queried. Of course! Why didn't I think of it. Satan; the devil, that horned, horny wonder, has crept into the souls of our (and our parents) most famous musical artists, causing them to spew forth musical obscenities which have brainwashed us into being his slaves in the never-ending conflict between good and evil.

"Music is not neutral." There are two distinct realms, musically as well as religiously, according to the host of the meeting. On the one side we have God and righteousness, and on the other, Satan, darkness and sin. The announcer quoted Jimi Hendrix as saying, "It's possible to hypnotize people with music, and when they're at their weakest, preach into their subconsciousness and tell them what you want." I thought I heard a trace of ironic hypocrisy, remembering how the Moral Majority gets their message across. But I decided to listen on.

Then came the part about how inspiration comes from external forces beyond our control, that people are "either slaves to sin or obedience." Satan is clever, the announcer said, because he leads men to think that they have their own ideas, stay in control of their lives, and do things by their own initiative. "We must choose which Lord to serve, and be used as they choose," he said. I, with the silly belief in the will of the individual to control (in part) his destiny, thought this a bit far-fetched, but listened on with bated breath.

The part about dope-addled musicians practicing black magic was quite humorous, as was the "backward masking" part, where albums with satanic messages hidden in them were "revealed." And then that horribly godless album by Earth, Wind and Fire which showed all religious symbols of the world together, as if they were all as "official" as Christianity. EWF lead singer, Maurice White, received attention for his comments that, "All religions are alike, all Gods are one and Jesus is just another teacher and prophet." I then thought about the announcers monologue that "Christianity is the only true faith in relation to God, the creator of the human race." I felt bad about those 80 percent "heathens" of the world who haven't been saved, or don't even know what Christianity is. The expression "Trying to corner the market on God" popped into my head for some reason.

But now the lecture became more interesting. The verbal vomit about devils with stratocasters has evolved into a diatribe on religion versus the individual. "What direction is your life going in, and what music do you listen to?" our host queried. Could it be he was taking advantage of our insecurities as college students? The book he gave me said that "Church and school get boring...so you go out cruising and boozing...drugs, and maybe sex, and most of all, you party. For what? You still end up down; you still feel the rejection, guilt and loneliness. Life is supposed to be free — so why do you feel like a prisoner?"

Alas. Now I could explain those all-too-human emotional downs that come with the uncertainties of chance. I've been on The Wrong Side! The freedom of choice, and its inherent responsibilities have kept me down. "Nothing attempted, nothing lost," was what he seemed to be telling me, and I finally saw the light. In the past, "People have tried everything to find the meaning of life and nothing has worked — analysis, self-help programs, drugs, meditation, mystical religions, etc," and none have satisfied the deepest spiritual needs of man." I could relate to this, because I've tried lots of these, and I'm not perfectly happy!

So here I was, still questioning the man who would later preside over my spiritual rebirth. His book told me that "You will only add to your sorrow and anxiety by trying to overcome these evil forces by your own human effort." I am now one of those who "in simple, childlike faith were set free." Free from responsibility, I am now at the mercy of my Creator. I hope he passes us this semester, 'cause I really need the grades. And I hope he gets us a job for the summer — I'm broke.

Ed King gets the last laugh

The Class of 1983 has not exactly had the best of luck. When they entered the University of Massachusetts in the fall of 1979, another freshman of sorts was entering the State House as Massachusetts' new governor. The next four years were not the bed of roses most hoped for. The budget was cut to the bare bones. Professors and administrators left the University in hopes of finding better pay. Classes became grossly overcrowded. Buildings fell apart. To some of us it looked as though the entire university was crumbling before our eyes. Although Ed King wasn't the sole reason for this deterioration, (the legislature also played Russian roulette with this campus), while governor he played a large part in the decay of higher education here at UMass.

John F. Hudson

So now, how does the Board of Trustees react to his past ways? What do you give to a man who never visited the University and talked to students? A man who oversaw the wholesale reorganization of the state's higher education system, a reorganization which many rightly claim has hurt the overall quality of a college education here at UMass. Give that man an honorary degree!

That's right an honorary degree. As usual, the isolated administrators in that ivory tower we call Whitmore have reacted with the vengeance and strength of an eight year-old child. Has the administration forgotten Ed King's reign of terror? "Daddy" Trustee insists that UMass give a degree to a man who inflicted more damage on this campus in four years than any other governor in recent history. Sadly, the administration has elected to roll over and quietly play dead. Mums the word until Commencement Day when Duffy, Field, Madson, et al will extol the virtues of this "great" man on the stage in Alumni stadium.

If you are able to get through in Whitmore and find out why such a horrendous decision was made, the answer for King's choice remains the same — tradition. According to protocol the outgoing governor is presented with an honorary degree by the university the year of his or her departure. So much for tradition. Suddenly it seems like an unpleasantly obscene word.

Some of the lowerclassmen may not be able to understand why a senior such as myself is up in arms over a simple honorary degree. After all he isn't the main speaker. Don't worry — the legacy of Ed King is just down the road for those in the midst of a UMass education.

"Mums the word until Commencement Day when Duffey, Field, Madson et al, will extol the virtues of this 'great' man..."

Take the Board of Regents, for example. Any and all decisions concerning policy must meet with the approval of this omnipresent body. Yet it is hardly representative. Of fifteen members, only one is a woman. No blacks or hispanics serve on the board. No members hail from the public education sector. And the chairman, James Martin has characterized the open meeting law as "...the curse of the Board of Regents." He said that he found the idea of granting scholarship aid to financially strapped students, "reprehensible." He even went so far as to characterize himself as a "son-of-a-bitch" and explained since the long range plan is already spelled out for all state schools, "...you (students) need not bother coming to our meetings." Forget that the man has the charisma of a raging bull and the charm of a runaway tractor-trailer. Ed may be gone, but his appointments live on. It is not only the seniors who should be appalled at the fact that Pier 4's most popular lobster customer is receiving a degree.

On Saturday, May 28th, everyone will be smiling, the sun will be shining and parents applauding — it will simply be a lovely day for the University. Except if you happen to be a student. Through all the hoopla and excitement most students will realize that all is not right. The pungent aroma of hypocrisy, of weakness, of vacilliation will be in the air. It's already beginning to smell on this campus, a smell of elitism and total disregard for students needs, student input and respect for the consumers of education, the ones who supposedly matter the most on this campus. As a senior I'm disgusted but not surprised. After four years, some things at UMass still haven't changed.

Prof. clarifies S. Africa position

To the Editor:

At the May 5th Faculty Senate meeting I moved to recommit the resolution on South Africa, and because the May 6th Collegian story on the Senate action did not fully explain this motion and its intent, I wish to clarify further. First, I was, and remain, strongly committed to the intent of the resolution as a means of expressing our moral outrage over the system of apartheid in South Africa. A motion to recommit is made by one favoring the issue on the floor but wishing to have further committee deliberation. Second, I had hoped that with the resolution recommitted, the Rules Committee in the two weeks prior to the final Senate meeting of the year would study it anew and work out some wording so as to preserve the long-standing scholastic tradition of free contact and exchange of knowledge and ideas everywhere. In seeking to combat the absence of freedom in a repressive political system we should be careful, it seems to me, not to impinge upon other freedoms, as in this case, academic freedom. If, for example, South Africa were the best or only spot on Earth from which to observe a rare comet or eclipse, would we have done the right thing to deny our scholars the financial opportunity to take part in its observations?

In a larger sense, what of the South African black community itself? If black South Africans have little or no hope internally, then what does this closing circle of isolation imposed by the outside world do to their aspirations? Should they be abandoned?

My motion to recommit, however, was not voted upon by the Senate. Having failed in this effort but nonetheless in favor of the resolution's basic intent, I then voted for the resolution.

COMPANY

Company, is an interesting musical. It is about a confirmed bachelor, Robert (Lawrence M. Devine), who is constantly in the company of his married friends. His friends, worried about his supposed lonely life, are constantly pestering him about committing himself to marriage. Robert in turn is in a confused state of mind as to what he really wants. As stated in the play's program, "Marriage has many pains...but celibacy has no pleasures."

Robert is not celibate of course, he has the company of three 'girls,' April (Lisa Carroll) the oddball airline hostess, Kathy (Mary K. Jennings) "who is just the best," and Marta (Veronica M. Smith) " who is fun to be with." All three women, vastly different, are frustrated and confused over Robert's intentions as shown in the hearty rendition of "You Could Drive a Person Crazy."

Although the ending was just a tad confusing, I think Robert discovered a few things about marriage and his life in general. I think he realized the good things that person can get from marriage, but I also think he was tired of being reminded of his lonely life. When all the married couples show up at his apartment to throw him his yearly and always expected 'surprise' birthday party, he doesn't come home. His friends get the hint and blow out the candles on the cake, making the wish for him.

Lawrence Devine did well in his role of Robert. I think his talents lay more in the acting area than in the singing and dancing area though. His excellent acting ability was obvious as he showed us the confused emotions of Robert. His facial expressions during the various scenes were perceptive and fun to watch. He looked as though he was enjoying himself.

The rest of the cast did well portraying their characters too. The musical numbers were fun to watch although it was sometimes hard to hear them singing, over the orchestra.

Cindy Winsky (Sarah) and Russell R. Greene (Harry) were fun to watch, especially during their judo scene. Winsky was the perfect nag and she has a singing voice that was a joy to listen to.

Robert M. Curtiss (Peter) and Christine Staples (Susan) were the interesting couple that got a quickie divorce in Mexico and then stayed together, because they had more fun being single together. Curtiss seemed too stiff and ill at ease with his role, Staples though, was a wonderfully irritating Southern belle.

Jennifer Daniels (Jenny) and David Marks (David) were the typical middle-class couple who, although they were a bit conservative, enjoyed trying new things such as smoking a joint. Daniels did a wonderful job portraying the misunderstood Jenny, she has a good sense of timing and she received a number of laughs from the audience.

Nancy J. Weglowski (Amy) and Alan D. Ball (Paul) were the cute couple who were getting married after many years of living together. Both Weglowski and Ball did well in their roles and they were fun to watch, especially during their pre-marriage scene.

Lynne Randall (Joanne) and Robert Daigle (Larry) were the wealthy and hip couple who after going to dinner and to the opera, end up at a disco. Daible was the perfect middle-aged man trying to be younger. Randall was great to watch as the harsh and realistic Joanne, especially during her energetic rendition of "Ladies who Lunch."

Lisa Carroll, Mary Jenning's and Veronica Smith all did well portraying the three women in Robert's life. Carroll was good as the ditsy April and the audience seemed to enjoy listening to her sing "Barcelona." Smith did OK as Marta, but her rendition of "Another Hundred People" seemed an octave too high for her. Jennings was as good as Kathy and her dance number "Tick Tock" was both energetic aad a good example of her dancing ability.

Though Company attempts to be an entertaining and thought provoking, its subject matter seems more appropriate for the Seventies than the Eighties. I think its appeal would have been more appropriate for an older audience and an older cast. Although the show has many flaws, it is worth seeing if just for the set alone.

Mary Jennings as Kathy in the University Ensemble production of Company.

For the eighth year in a row, the UMass Art Department will present a live art performance. "Primavera" will be exhibited, or to be more precise, performed at 8:00 p.m. on May 10, in Hampden Theater, Southwest.

John Grillo, a UMass Art Department professor, will serve as Master of Ceremonies of this rather unusual performance. An art performance is an experiment of placing art in theater. Students are taken out of the classroom to compose their own experiences which they create in an environment that they will construct in the theater.

The combination of materials, music and words produce live art pieces that will range from the real to the absurd. The series of art pieces will explore subjects such as "4000 Years of Art in 3 Minutes" and "Cymbolism."

This performance not only involves the cast, but the audience as well. In fact, members of last year's audition have now become part of this year's performance. For a fun and entertaining evening out, come be part of "Primavera" in Hampden Theater.

Dance concert worth the wait

FIVE COLLEGE FACULTY DANCE CONCERT
Thursday, May 5
Theater 14, Smith College

By JULIE PROCOPIOW
Collegian Staff

Anticipation, Anticipation
It's making me wait,
It's keeping me waiting...

— Carly Simon

Thursday's opening night performance of the Five College Faculty Dance Concert in Smith College's Theater 14 could easily have inspired Carly Simon to write this song. When the show started, almost one half hour late, I expected to get what I had waited so long for, knowing the full potential of the department's staff...and I did!

Each of the eleven pieces were choreographed by staff members of the Five College Dance Department and performed by a superior class of student dancers. Contributing to the show's excellence was the great variety of dance styles selected for the performance. The styles ranged from modern dance to African dance and included a classical ballet piece, which proved a refreshing change.

"Collection," choreographed by UMass' Andrea Watkins, started off the show and was enhanced by the music of Randy Newman. The piece was composed of seven brief parts that varied in style; some were more humorous than others. Dressed in red and white leotards and shorts, the seven dancers, two men and five women, performed the complicated dance combinations with apparent ease.

The second piece, entitled "Family Portrait," was choreographed by Richard Jones. This engaging piece of work explored the inner grief of three generations of women over the loss of their husbands. Accompanied by the music of Mozart, the three dancers moved with strength and feeling, causing the audience to suffer with them the pain that they were going through. The piece was quite original and needless to say exceptionally moving.

This piece of somber expression was followed by "Mountain Sun Stream," a light and airy jubilant dance choreographed by Andrea Watkins. The background was light blue and could easily have resembled either a stream or the sky that provides a home for the mountain sun. Donned in light blue leotards, the three female dancers flitted around the stage to the music of Johann Strauss taking on the characteristics of water nymphs.

"Mandiani," the dance of celebration of the Bambara peoples of the Old Mali Empire, came next. Choreographed by African dancer Eno Washington, the dance involved only a drummer who played the traditional music of Bamidele Osumarea and Eno Washington himself. His excited jumps and turns on stage characterized dance of the African people and greatly entertained a number of people who had never before experienced this kind of dance.

The first intermission followed without failing to keep the audience in a state of anticipation for the rest of the show. "Triolet," by Hannah C. Wiley, started off the second part of the show. The use of three musicians (a celloist, violinist, and pianist) who played the music of Schubert added a nice touch to the performers' effect. The piece was a delightful show of six dancers, three men and three women, dressed in light brown frock-like costumes who practically waltzed to the manuet style music.

Val Ondes' "Musing" was next and portrayed a lone dancer on stage all in black, with the contemporary music of Paul Hindemith accompanying her. Ruth Plotkin gave an interesting performance, combining different forms of ballet in her brief solo.

"Dances of Isadora Duncan" provided an interesting change in mood, with the dancers resembling nymph-like creatures of the woods. "Les Sylphides," a well known classical ballet piece utilizing the music of Chopin, immediately followed. The dancers did an exceptional job and it was obvious that a great amount of work was put into the piece.

The second intermission, which was simply too long, kept the audience waiting with a great degree of impatience. The third set finally began with "Character Class Concert," a comical sequence involving eight dancers in a mock dance class.

Eno Washington's second piece, "Good Morning Heartache," followed. A dance for Seta, which was a moving work composed in memoriam of Seta Rampersand. Kayla Schwartz and Hugh Manheim performed the piece with a sensitivity strong enough to move the audience as well.

The last piece, "Bolero," by Richard Jones was exceptional and by far the most powerful of all. The dance started off with the five dancers rising from a prone position on the floor; the music of Ravel built up to a sensual climax as the dancers concluded the performance in frenzied improvisation that enhanced the tone of chaos and disorder.

Despite the bothersome delays of the evening, I definitely got what I had waited (and waited and waited) for! The concert will be performed again May 13 and May 14 at Amherst College's Kirby Theater at 8:00 p.m. Don't miss it!

Gorillas to meet Pioneers

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

Right now, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team must feel like a punching bag, hanging helplessly from the ceiling, as passersby take free shots.

Some hard hitters, Syracuse and Maryland stopped by this past weekend to bang away at the exposed Gorilla bodies.

Syracuse outran, outpassed, and outshot the Gorillas on the way to a convincing 15-7 win last Friday at Boyden Field.

Then Maryland came to UMass Sunday to dole out some mental torture in the form of 12 consecutive goals over the final three periods and walked away with a freaky 13-4 win.

And today, C.W. Post will get their opportunity at the Gorillas when they host UMass at 3 p.m.

UMass head coach Dick Garber chuckled when the C.W. Post coach, an old friend of his, remarked that a win over UMass could make their season.

"This year we've made a lot of teams' seasons," said Garber.

Physically, the Gorillas are hurting. In addition to a lot of sore bodies, midfielder Peter Martino has a banged up knee, Chris Schmitz may have strep throat and goalie Tom Curran has been ill the last week and unable to play.

Mentally, this past weekend may have the Gorillas talking to themselves a bit, but they're hoping to avoid the ultimate drastic measure that losing seasons provide, namely rolling over and dying before someone else takes a shot.

"I know nobody will quit," said senior Paul Fogarty, whose last home game was the Maryland loss. "We still like playing, but it's not the same."

C.W. Post is not filled with lacrosse tradition, but in recent years have fielded improving squads. This year they beat Hofstra, a team that handed UMass a 10-8 loss earlier this year.

There was no practice. Everyone went home to heal for today's ride to Long Island.

Will somebody take down that punching bag?

Softball misses bid; Again

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Four years ago, as a freshman, Jackie Gaw went to the College World Series with the University of Massachusetts softball team. The next two years produced 16-7 and 18-7 records for UMass and both years, they narrowly missed a bid to the playoffs when it went to Adelphi.

This year, the Gaw led Minutewomen produced a 28-10 record, the top record in the Northeast Division I. Against Division I schools they went 18-8.

And this year, Jackie Gaw, who has hit .400 all four years, and the rest of her Minutewomen teammates will again sit home as they again came close but did not get invited to the NCAA tournament.

The University of Rhode Island, who went 26-11 and posted a Division I record of 17-9, will represent the Northeast region this year.

"I really felt we would have represented the region better," said a very disappointed head coach Elaine Sortino. "For the last three years it has come down to the last night (and the decision of the tournament selection committee) and for three years we've come up empty handed."

The crucial factor was that URI took two of the three games that the two played this year. The rubber match was a 3-2 nail biter at the Atlantic 10 championship. Gaw was thrown out at the plate in that game -- the tying run.

"It was a real tough decision for the committee," said Sortino. They picked the whole field in three hours. It took them one hour to pick the Northeast bid.

"They picked three teams from the Midwest and didn't even consider us for an at large bid. To be 28-10 and not going anywhere," she said, her voice trailing off.

"We had our chances," Sortino said. "This weekend, I saw some really good things. We were playing well."

Gazelles seeded 4th in NCAA

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

After closing out a successful 11-1-1 season last Wednesday, a tired University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will take a much deserved rest as it drew a bye in the preliminary round of the NCAA National Championships.

Being fourth seeded gave UMass the bye and on Saturday the women will meet the winner of Wednesday's Northwestern-Harvard match which will be played at Harvard. No decision has been made as to where the game will be, home or away.

UMass coach Pam Hixon, who feels Harvard is the better team and should pull out a victory against Northwestern, said that even if UMass had not received a bye that the defending National Champions would be ready to play.

"There's two ways to look at it," Hixon said.

"Certainly playing is better than not playing. Having a bye just means a layoff; 10 days without a game. It will be easier because we have to play less games to win. The weeks rest is going to do us well."

The Gazelles will have a chance to recooperate from small, but reoccuring injuries that have been haunting the team throughout the season. The team's leading scorer, sophomore Pam Moryl, sustained a broken finger in the Northeastern match last Wednesday but it is not serious enough for the aggressive attacker to miss the quarterfinals.

"There's nothing to keep anyone out," Hixon said. "But with a rest, people wil be a lot stronger."

If the Gazelles make it through the quarterfinals on Saturday, the semifinals and finals will be the following weekend of the 21st and 22nd at the University of Pennsylvania.

"It's hard to say," Hixon commented about the team's chances of a repeat of last years performance. "The competition is much different this year. I think we need to play our best on Saturday. You get to post season play and it's actually like starting a new season."

"As far as repeating, who knows."

Pete Rocca, winner of two silver medals in Montreal, trains for another shot at L.A. Olympics

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

For millions of amateur athletes around the globe, it is THE DREAM to win a medal at the Olympic Games, to see their national flag raised to the rafters, and to be considered one of the best in the world at their sport.

Pete Rocca, a 25-year-old graduate student in the sport management program at UMass, is one of the lucky ones. He has stood upon the elusive platform. He has fulfilled THE DREAM.

It happened on a warm July night almost seven years ago in Montreal. Rocca, who had just completed his freshman year at the University of California-Berkeley, won two silver medals, in the 100-meter backstroke and the 200-meter backstroke, finishing, in each event, directly behind John Nabor, who set new world records in both distances.

Rocca was a member of a phenomenal United States men's swimming team that won 12 of a possible 13 gold medals and 25 of 33 medals overall. In four events (including the 200 backstroke) the Americans went 1-2-3. In four others the U.S. went 1-2. Leaders of the team included Nabor (4 golds and a silver), James Montgomery (3 golds and a bronze) and Brian Goodell (golds in 400 and 1,500 freestyle).

"We had a remarkable team," said Rocca in a recent interview. "We had a group of guys who together were the best in the world. You felt like part of them. So when you're up against the rest of the world competing, you don't realize it's the Olympics and this is the best."

Although the Olympics can be an overwhelming experience for any athlete, especially an 18-year-old, Rocca learned to cope with the pressure and media hype surrounding the two-week competition that dates back to 776 B.C.

"I had to control my emotions and say it was a normal meet," Rocca said. "There's so much hype that if you get lost in it you can totally lose your concentration. I just had to pretend it was a regular meet. You have to put all the exterior things out of your mind and just swim the race."

Rocca, who grew up in a suburb of San Francisco and began swimming in the community recreation program, first broke into the national spotlight by placing in the backstroke at the AAU national championships after his sophomore year in high school. Rocca later earned a trip to the 1975 Pan Am Games by virtue of his second place finish at the AAU's in the summer after his senior year.

"I realized then that if I worked hard and improved, then I would have a shot at it (the Olympics)," said Rocca. "But you don't think about it. You just go on and try to improve."

In the ensuing year after the Olympics, Rocca, like several of his Olympic swimming teammates, suffered an emotional letdown.

"It was really a tough year for me in 1977," remembered Rocca. "All my friends on the team, especially those in my age group, had a tough time because of the emotional high that you've reached a goal, and then what do you do? You drop down and everything is secondary compared to the experience in the Olympics."

Rebounding strongly in 1978 and the early part of 1979, Rocca, one year before the Moscow Olympics, was considered the number one backstroker in the world. The experts predicted gold, but Rocca had other ideas.

"In '79 I had the best season of my life, but I never wanted to see the pool again because the pressure had gotten so much," said Rocca. "I got to the point where I hated swimming so much I quit for the summer. I didn't worry about training and I took it easy. By the time September came around to get back in shape, I really wanted to, and I wanted to try for '80 rather than having it forced upon me. The time off was really beneficial."

But the dreams of Olympic gold were shattered in March of 1980 when former President Jimmy Carter announced the United States would boycott the games in protest of the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan.

"I took a very patriotic stance at the time thinking 'This can do something'," said Rocca. "I accepted it (the boycott) on the exterior, but on the interior I don't think I ever have. Looking back, it was the worst decision any President has ever made, as far as I'm concerned. You don't use the Olympics as a political tool. He's making the decision for us (the athletes) and he has no right to do that."

Today, Rocca works out daily in the Boyden Pool, hoping to win a spot on the U.S. team for the 1984 Games in Los Angeles.

"I'm older, stronger and I have a better endurance background so I don't need the amount of training that I did when I was younger. Right now I'm swimming once a day and doing weights three times a week. This summer I'll be working and training in New Jersey. I look at UMass as a base stage to get some yardage under me and just get back in shape."

Although the common belief in the sporting public is that swimmers in their middle-twenties are "over-the-hill," Rocca feels he can compete successfully with the younger generation.

"Physiologically, men get stronger up to about 28 or 29. You are going to get smarter too," said Rocca. "I think I would have an advantage over them (the younger swimmers) if I stay with it."

For Pete Rocca, THE DREAM still burns bright, just like the Olympic torch.

Regents adopt admission standards

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

BOSTON -- The Massachusetts Board of Regents passed an admissions standards plan yesterday that for the first time requires that all public colleges and universities to adhere to centralized minimum admission guidelines for college acceptance.

Culminating 18 months of effort the Regents unanimously passed an "interim" plan which they will review and are expected to give final approval of the guidelines in December. There are no "substantive" changes anticipated, Chancellor of Higher Education John B. Duff and Regents Vice-Chairman David Beaubien said during a press conference after the vote.

The plan, which is to be fully implemented by Sept. 1987, requires that public college-bound high school students take the "16 Carnegie credits" of four English courses, three math courses, two natural and two social science courses, two foreign language courses and three electives of the above subjects.

The plan also calls for an "eligibility index" which requires entering students to meet a sliding scale composed of weighted high school class rank and SAT scores. The scale ranges from admitting students with a class rank in the top 15 percent and a combined SAT score of 500 to admitting students in the bottom 10 percent with a combined SAT of 1250. The median scale is the 50th percentil with a combined SAT of 850. The sliding scale will go into effect September 1984.

The plan will exempt certain categories of students which includes those entering college more than three years after completion of high school; educationally disadvantaged students whose first language is not English or attend school districts with limited course offerings; students with special needs under the Chapter 766 program and students transferring from two-year colleges.

Former Governor and present Regent Foster Furcolo attempted to amend the plan to allow students to be eligible for acceptance after one year of college course work at a community college.

"The best predictor (for college completion) comes with how a student handles his first year in college. If a person says 'I can do the work' and proves it -- they should be given the chance," Furcolo said.

Beaubien countered Furcolo's proposal.

"We run a risk amending this document at this stage. Let's put this (amendment) into committee and see if we can accommodate your concerns," Beaubien said.

Furcolo responded.

"I'm inclined to think we should not delay. We're talking about the lives of our young people. Where a couple of months means a long time," Furcolo said.

Duff said he supported Furcolo's philosophy but maintained that the transfer program between community colleges and four year institutions will be improved.

UMass gets slim aid pie

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

Boston students attending public colleges and universities will receive less than $3 million in scholarship assistance from the $15 million fund the Massachusetts Legislature passed under guidelines developed by the Board of Regents.

In passing the scholarship increase last month the Legislature instructed the Regents to divide up the money, subject to the approval of the Ways and Means Committees of the Legislature.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee is said to be opposed to the Regents formula because it does not earmark enough money to experimental aid programs and favors independent institutions in Massachusetts.

The Regents propose that $11.5 million go into the General Scholarship Program. By law only 25 percent of this money can go to public-sector students. An additional $2 million will go into the Matching Grant program designed for independent colleges and universities.

Another $1.5 million will be used to fund four new state financial aid programs which will consist of a work-study program to be supplemented with private industry grants; assistance for graduate students; aid to older non-traditional students; and low-interest loans.

"It's been (the distribution formula) equitable, especially since we've had the new tuition waiver policy (for the public students), the publics have not even used all of their monies," John B. Duff, chancellor of Higher Education said yesterday.

Duff emphasized however that "there can be changes" in the proposed formula.

Duff also defended the funding of the new programs.

"It is not a large amount of money. But it is enough seed money. They're ground-breaking programs," he said.

Individual grants under the guidelines will also be increased. Presently students attending public institutions receive a maximum grant of $300, students attending out-of-state colleges receive $600 and students at independent Massachusetts colleges receive a grant of $900. The new plan grants $400, $800 and $1,200 respectively to each student.

A family of four with an income of less than $20,000 would be eligible for scholarship aid. Under the present system only families earning less than $15,000 are eligible.

The additional scholarship aid will be available for the next academic year.

Honorary degree to King commences student dissent

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Tradition at the University of Massachusetts states that governors, upon completion of their term, receive an honorary degree from the University but, this year, with Edward J. King being the recipient, students are not in accord with the policy, according to a Collegian poll yesterday.

Brian Beaudreault

Out of 35 students polled in the Campus Center, 20 felt King should not be given a degree, 11 felt that it was a good idea, and four people had no opinion.

To be fair to even those who felt that the awarding of the degree was a good idea, it should be pointed out that several of those individuals were more in favor of the tradition than of the choice of King.

"I don't mind that he gets the degree as long as long as he knows it's routine," said Kathleen Shea, a 20-year-old sophomore psychology major.

Peter Lannigan, a senior finance major, also agreed, in principle, with the policy but not necessarily with the choice.

"I'm not too impressed with his record but just because he was governor warrants the degree," said Lannigan. "I respect him for the fact that he was governor, not his performance as governor."

The overwhelmingly majority felt that, regardless of tradition, King was not worthy of an honorary degree.

"I feel that it is a bureaucratic move," said Edward Carp, a 21-year-old senior majoring in marketing. "The students should have more say in who gets degrees because they're represented by that move."

"Besides," chimed in Carp's friend Robert Boyd, another senior, "we have to listen to that clown speak now."

Louise Spinner, a sophomore communications major, saw the King degree as a strange move.

"I just think it's ironic (the degree) considering half the students here want to wring his neck," Spinner said.

Still more dissent surfaced:

"There are a lot of people more worthy of the award," added Debbie Davis, a junior marketing major.

James Melody, another graduating senior felt that the problem lay in the fact the degree is given in rubber-stamp fashion.

"The policy should be adjusted to fulfill the needs of the University community," Melody said. "It shouldn't be a given thing."

Robert Boyd

Brian Beaudreault said, "He has been the governor for four years. I think it's a good gesture on the part of the administration to honor him with a degree."

Some of those polled had special individual reasons for agreeing with the decision.

"He kept taxes down and helped out industry in the state a lot," said James A. MacDonald, a senior English major, "besides, he's a good buddy of my dad's."

Hitler diaries reporter surfaces after 5 days, claims innocence

HAMBURG, West Germany — The reporter who bought the fake Adolf Hitler diaries for Stern magazine claimed yesterday he never suspected the journals were phony, but he refused to reveal the source for the documents.

"Of course I was gullible," Gerd Heidemann told a news conference at his Hamburg home, breaking a five-day silence. "I am no Hitler researcher."

Stern spent millions of dollars for the diaries and has filed a fraud suit against Heidemann.

The reporter claimed the man who supplied them swore they were retrieved "right out of the (Nazi) plane."

The purported diaries of the Nazi dictator were said to have been carried in an aircraft that left Berlin April 21, 1945, near the end of World War II. The plane crashed in a field near Boernersdorf in what is now East Germany.

Asked why he refused to reveal his source, Heidemann replied: "Because this man probably also was deceived. He is trying on his own to clear up where they come from and if they are forgers, to identify them," he said, in apparent reference to whoever supplied his contact with the bogus diaries.

Senate panel rejects Reagan plea for $60m extra Salvadoran aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee on yesterday unanimously approved $20 million more for training the embattled Salvadoran army this year, but rejected an additional $60 million that President Reagan had requested.

While the amount approved fell short of what the president had asked for, William Schneider Jr., undersecretary of state for security assistance, commended the committee "for its progress" in granting the additional money.

But afterwards Schneider said the rejection of the president's full request increases the risk that U.S. support will not be enough for the Salvadoran government to succeed in its war with leftist guerrillas.

If accepted by the full Senate and the House, the $20 million would boost U.S. military aid to El Salvador this year to $76.3 million. Reagan had sought a total of $136.3 million for the Salvadoran army in its war with leftist guerrillas.

The Senate committee also approved $76.3 million in military aid to El Salvador for fiscal 1984, which starts Oct. 1. Reagan had requested $86.3 million in military aid for fiscal 1984.

WHO report claims widespread death would result from minor nuclear war

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — A report released yesterday by the World Health Organization estimates that about half of the world's population of 4.5 billion would be "immediate victims" of an all-out nuclear war.

The report, prepared by an international committee of 10 scientists, listed a potential toll of 1.15 billion dead and 1.1 billion injured in outlining the worst of three war scenarios which it said "do not include the extreme views."

It warned that the chances of injured survivors receiving any medical attention are "next to nil" and voiced doubt that "even a comprehensive civil defense policy would reduce significantly the number of casualties."

Compiled from various studies, the all-out nuclear war described in the 151-page report assumes that 10,000 megatons of nuclear bombs are exploded all over the world — 90 percent of them in Europe, Asia, and North America.

The report says that a war with smaller, tactical weapons totaling 20 megatons and limited to military targets in Central Europe would claim about 9 million dead or severely injured with the same number of people suffering less serious injuries. "Even if the attack is aimed only at military targets, the civilian casualties would outnumber military casualties by 16-1," the report said.

In the third scenario, which supposed that the Houses of Parliament in London were the target of a single one-megaton bomb — 80 times the explosive power of the Hiroshima bomb — the report lists 1.8 million dead and 1.7 million injured as potential casualties.

Authors of the report, submitted to the 159-nation WHO's annual assembly , include scientists from the United States, the Soviet Union, France, Britain, Japan, Sweden, Austria, Venezuela, Nigeria and the Netherlands.

Child abuse report law passes House, on to Senate floor

BOSTON — A measure requiring the reporting of certain child abuse cases to prosecutors has passed the Massachusetts House and has gone to the Senate.

The bill, filed by Rep. A. Joseph DeNucci, D-Newton, passed the House on a voice vote yesterday.

Under current law, suspected cases of child abuse must be reported to the Department of Social Services, but DSS is not required to report abuse unless a death occurs. Under the bill, DSS would have to report certain cases of abuse to district attorneys.

Reports would have to be made in cases where injury or neglect resulted in admission to a medical intensive care unit; or where a serious bodily injury was part of a pattern of abuse or neglect. Cases of rape or sexual exploitation — such as allowing participation in prostitution or pornography — would also have to be referred to the district attorney.

Springfield psychologist found innocent in child beating

SPRINGFIELD — A Former Springfield psychologist, accused of severely beating his four-year-old adopted son, has been found innocent by a Hampden Superior Court jury.

The jury deliberated for one hour Monday and four hours yesterday before finding Jacke Harris innocent of nine counts of assault and battery, three counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and one count of failure to provide proper care and guidance for a child.

Double death in Brockton; police seek male suspect, 29

BROCKTON — Police spread a search yesterday for a Brockton man wanted in the shooting deaths of two young women whose bodies were found sprawled in the living room of a home.

The infant daughter of one woman also was missing when police, following an anonymous telephone tip, discovered the bodies of Mary Ross, 23, and Valentina Giovanniello, 20.

A medical examiner said they had been shot with a small-caliber handgun and had been dead a day or more before being found.

Reagan may alter arms policy on negotiations with Soviets

WASHINGTON — President Reagan met with his national security advisers yesterday to consider shifting the American position in arms negotiations with the Soviet Union, while the president also pressed his case with Congress for deployment of the new MX missile.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes would not comment directly on the meeting but said: "It's indeed possible that we may have modifications to our START (Strategic Arms Reduction Talks) proposal."

An administration official who declined to be identified by name said the session with advisers "was not a decision-making session," but added that by the time talks with the Soviet Union resume, the treaty that Reagan proposed a year ago may be altered.

Bag Bandit bank breaker Bray busted by LA police

LOS ANGELES — A man suspected of being the Paper Bag Bandit, who allegedly robbed more California banks than anyone else, was arrested and charged yesterday with 54 holdups.

When Robert Allan Bray, 31, was arrested at 5:30 a.m. at a girlfriend's apartment in Cudahy, about eight miles southeast of Los Angeles, police said he had $4.20 in his pocket.

"He was busted," Los Angeles police robbery Detective Jimmy Grayson said of Bray, who was named in a Feb. 23 federal bank robbery warrant.

Bray, who allegedly turned to robbery to support a drug habit, was arraigned on 54 federal counts of bank robbery before U.S. Magistrate Ralph Geffen.

Livestock-hunting wild dogs target of Hampden posse

HAMPDEN — Selectmen in this rural suburb of Springfield say police will lead a mission to rid woods of wild dogs accused of killing several farm animals.

Hampden Dog Officer Art LaFrance said a pack of five or six dogs has "caused problems up and down the road."

"They den up like a fox or coyote through the winter," LaFrance said. He said the dogs probably are abandoned pets.

"You don't realize the damage they do on wildlife, especially deer.

Targeted jobs raise seniority issues at University

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Staff

Attempts by the University of Massachusetts-Amherst and four on-campus unions to hire more minorities and women have received mixed reactions from those involved.

Since 1981, eight positions termed "targeted" have been filled by women and minorities because of a collective bargaining agreement between the University and the unions, said Ron Sinacore, staff assistant in the Affirmative Action office at UMass.

According to the clause, "targeted" positions are jobs to be filled by a minority or a woman regardless of contractual language regarding a union employees seniority status.

"It's kind of discouraging," said John Koloski, a white physical plant employee who applied for a mason's job but was turned down because it was targeted and he didn't fit the bill. Although Koloski had the seniority to get the job, it was filled by a black man from outside the department.

"You're trying to pick up a trade and learn the procedures and someone comes in off the street and gets the job," Koloski said.

Koloski said he had been performing his job as construction handyman well and should have gotten the mason's job.

"This is an equal opportunity employer but I felt I wasn't treated equally. I was geared for this position."

Koloski said he doesn't resent anyone because he didn't get the job. "It's not any individuals fault," he said.

As a result of the situation, Tom Aldrich, foreman of the mason shop in which Koloski works said, "The whole morale of the shop has gone down. I think the rules should bend a little and not be so blanket. Jobs should be targeted where there isn't a qualified person waiting in the wings to get the job."

Jobs that require a license are permissible to target because generally there aren't that many licensed employees on campus and new people need to be hired from outside, Aldrich said.

Referring to the black man that was hired for the targeted job, Aldrich said, "The man that got the job was definitely qualified and everyone liked him but my men wanted to know why I hired this man. Koloski was definitely qualified for the job. I had to explain to them that my hands were tied."

The campus and the unions, which include the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME), the University Staff Association of the Massachusetts Teachers Association (USA/MTA), and the International Brotherhood of Police Officers (IBPO), units A and B, entered into the partnership to increase the number of women and minorities in upper level, traditionally all white, male-dominated positions, said Thelma Griffith-Johnson, director of Affirmative Action.

Affirmative Action Coordinator Ronald Sinacore said, "Targeting is going to work in the upgraded positions which have been hard to fill with women or minorities because of seniority. The unions and the University recognize the only way to get these positions filled with women and minorities is by bypassing seniority."

To determine whether to target a position, the number of women and minorities currently working on the campus within a job title are compared to those women and minorities in those job titles in the labor market area whom the University can reasonably expect to recruit, said Johnson.

"When a position is targeted we contact the line supervisor and superintendent of the unit in which the position resides," she said.

Sinacore said if there are not any minorities or women currently working on campus or in the personnel office applicant pool to fill the position, then the contractual hiring process is resumed. Ther person with the most seniority gets the job.

"It's one thing to target and it's another to fill," he said.

The University does not advertise targeted jobs off campus. However, contacts in the community that send women and minorities to the University to apply, Sinacore said.

Tenure granted to 32 UMass professors

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

Although final evaluation processes are not yet complete, 32 professors at the University of Massachusetts have been awarded tenure this year, and three have been rejected.

The process of awarding tenure begins with student evaluation forms and ends with a decision by the Board of Trustees, according to Massachusetts Society of Professors President Bruce Laurie.

"The process can be looked at in this way," Laurie said. "Faculty members make recommendations, and administrators make the decisions."

Laurie said the process involves the review of recommendations in three areas: teaching, service to the University and research.

"To achieve tenure, a candidate must have excellence in two areas, and strength in the third," Laurie said.

Along with student and faculty evaluations of those three areas, the opinions of eight to 10 professionals from outside the University are solicited, Laurie said.

The candidates are then reviewed by their department heads, and the department heads make recommendations to the next level: Dean's committee.

"The Dean's committee is comprised of five to 12 members of the candidates particular school within the University — such as the College of Arts and Sciences or the School of Education," Laurie said.

Dean's committees are the final level before the recommendations reach the administrative level. The candidates are then considered by the University's Provost's office, the chancellor, the president and finally the Board of Trustees.

The provost's office "considers evaluations and recommendations carefully," according to Acting Deputy Provost David C. Bischoff.

"The purpose of our reviewing them is to standardize the criteria for tenure awards across campus," Bischoff said.

Professors who are awarded tenure "are usually assistant professors and with their tenure, they are almost always promoted to associate professors," Bischoff said. He added that these promotions usually involve a pay raise.

Budget Act debate on Senate agenda

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Recognized Student Organizations (RSOs) will have a final chance to lobby for a change in their 1984 budgets tonight, when the Undergraduate Student Senate considers next year's budget act.

Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan said he does not expect much opposition to the act as a whole, but said "people will have their questions and comments," and the Seante "will go over it line by line."

"A lot of what students get out of the senate is from the budget act directly," Sullivan said at last week's senate meeting.

Budgets Committee Chair Eugene Bull said yesterday that a public hearing held last night was for the purpose of giving information on final budget recommendations to student groups and was not intended as a forum for debating individual budgets.

"On the Senate floor the night after (the hearings) is where the groups will try to make changes," Bull said. "I don't see that there will be a lot of objection (to the budget), though."

This year the Budgets Committee allocated $1,140,970 to student groups, $64,437 more than last year. Though the Student Activities Fee has remained at $96 per student for the last two years, an increase in the number of undergraduate students and returning (unused) Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) monies will pay for the difference.

Passage of the Budget Act is the end of a "very detailed and lengthy process," which begins in Feb., Sullivan said.

The SAO computes the figures which show how much SATF money is available to allocate, Bull said. Then, every RSO must submit a budget proposal to the committee by mid-Feb., and budget proposal hearings are held with each group until April. After the hearings, the committee balances the budget and comes out with its final recommendations in the Budget Act. After the Senate approves the Act, RSOs can start using their 1984 budget money on July 1, Bull said.

Pioneer Cablevision bows to demands

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

In response to demands to improve Amherst's cable television service, Pioneer Cablevision of Amherst has agreed to replace three cable television channels.

Pioneer Cablevision agreed to make the changes after the Amherst Cablevision Committee petitioned the company's general manager, August Lavill, in response to grievances aired by customers during the first three months of the year.

The committee requested Pioneer Cablevision to reinstate Boston's channel 56, which was removed from service at the beginning of the year, Home Box Office (HBO), and add channel 20 from Waterbury, CT.

The committee also requested that Pioneer Cablevision increase subscriber fees to acquire channels 9 (Chicago's WGN), and 11 (New York's WOR).

Pioneer Cablevision removed channels 56, 11 and 9 on January 1 after a Federal Copyright Tribunal ruled that cable companies would have to pay an increased copyright fee for carrying stations out of local television markets.

"The ruling stated that a distance signal in any cable system must pay (to the tribunal) 3.75 percent of its gross income for each single long-distance station," Lavill said. "We would've had to pay 11.25 percent of our gross income."

The average person blames the cable company, but it's the tribunal (that created the problem)," he said.

The lost channels were replaced with Music Television (MTV), the Weather Channel, the Cable Health Network, and the Christian Broadcast Service.

Lavill said HBO service will return to Amherst Cablevision by July.

The system retains long-distance signals from Boston's channels 4, 5 and 38 but is not required to pay the copyright fee on them because they were added before June, 1981. The new law affects all long-distance signals added after June, 1981.

Lavill and Amherst Cablevision Committee chairman Michael Sullivan will meet to discuss the grievances soon after the Amherst Town Meeting is over. The committee is a citizen's group organized to represent the public interest.

Lavill said he did not know exactly when channels 56 and 20 and the CBS affiliate could be added. Pioneer Cablevision must first solve the problems brought about by the tribunal's decision before adding the stations, he said.

Graduate Senate elects new officers

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

After the largest voter turnout in the three years that the Graduate school has had general elections, current Vice-President Sanjiv Dugal yesterday captured the Senate presidency while Senator David Wazeter was elected vice-president.

Graduate students also overwhelmingly supported referenda calling for graduate student unionization and an installment plan for graduate tuition bill paying.

The Graduate Senate also last night by acclamation re-elected Greg Graham as executive officer of the Senate and elected Steven Keye as treasurer. Both Graham and Keye ran unopposed.

Dugal, a native of India and a graduate student in the department of agriculture and resource economics, has been vice president of the Senate for the last two years and a senator for the last three.

"I would like to thank everyone for contributing to this historic voter turnout. This proves that graduate students do want to get involved in the issues and have certain expectations," Dugal said.

"I'll do my best to fulfill their hopes," Dugal added.

Dugal promised to "increase our efforts" in pursuing graduate student organization, which 82 percent of the voters supported, and the question of an installment payment plan for tuition and fees which 76 percent supported.

Dugal's vice-president, Wazeter said he hopes to use his skills from the Labor Center to help in the fight for graduate student organization and to concentrate on a Graduate Senate newsletter.

Dugal replaces Jack Delmond who has been a senator for the last five years and president for the last three. Delmond, who is graduating this semester, called his long association with the Senate a "fantastic learning experience" and applauded the support he has received from the senators and officers. Delmond especially thanked Jo Stokes, staff assistant for the Senate, and Wasyl Matveychuk, the Senate's committee coordinator, for their support.

Also last night, the Senate appropriated $210 to help defray the cost of a marble plaque in memory of the students gunned down on the campuses of Kent State University and Jackson State College 15 years ago. The plaque is to be placed in the Student Union Building to replace the memorial stone which mysteriously disappeared three years ago from its location under a tree near the campus pond.

The Senate was addressed also last night by Larry Cox, producer-director of the UMass Music Theater Guild's production of Hair which has been seen by approximately 14,000 people in its six performances on the UMass and Amherst College campuses.

The Senate funded $250 for an encore performance of the rock musical to be given at 8 p.m. this Saturday after the Pond Series.

Unofficial election results announced for Northeast

Though official tabulations are not yet available, Northeast Area Government (NEAG) election results put Margaret Deacutis as the new president, defeating Joseph Sparks. Kirsten Dahl ran unopposed for the vice-presidential slot, and Darcy Conway, who also ran unopposed, fought and won a campaign for treasurer against strong write-in candidate Jane Dunlip. The new NEAG secretary is Dianne Rossi, who defeated Pauline Kelly.

The new candidates, slated to take office in Sept., were introduced at the last NEAG meeting of the semester.

Media responsibility urged

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

The recent Hitler's diaries fraud is an example of the reluctance of the press to admit to its own mistakes and differentiate "real" news events from "pseudo" news events, said author and media critic Edward J. Epstein last night.

Addressing an audience of 100 people at the University of Massachusets, Epstein questioned the role of journalistic institutions and their authority in feeding news to the public in a speech on "The Investigation of Truth."

Epstein said the reluctance of Newsweek, the Times of London, and the German magazine Stern, which together bought the diaries, were negligent in investigating their authenticity, and thus served only to "pass on gossip."

"Why does the press feel somehow it can't make mistakes, that it is above criticism?" Epstein asked, noting Newsweek's original denial of involvement in the sale of the diaries.

"Validation of a story comes from the authority on which it rests," he said, "but what happens when that authority is willing to talk about what they don't know or release information that is not verified by a reliable source? And why should journalists always rely on sources if they have the capacity to investigate a story themselves?"

Epstein used the example to expound on the repetition of news, and the quality of newspaper journalism. Newspaper shouldn't constantly try to analyze, or find "one truth," but to record daily changes, he said. "News is not always the truth, it is very close to the truth. You cannot find out the truth in a single day or a week," he said, adding too many reporters plagiarize facts from other newspapers, not stopping to realize the source they are plagiarizing might be inaccurate.

Media critic Edward J. Epstein spoke last night on his specialty, accuracy in media.

"If news were a more self-critical institution, we would have a more real sense of what is going on, instead of someone's perceptions of what is going on, based on other news accounts."

The recent development of news in cable television and the time it devotes to stories is crucial for one's perception of general news; channels like Cable News Network (CNN) and commercial television's "Nightline," which spend as much as half an hour on one subject, are presenting news "as close to an ideal" as possible, he said.

"Being a journalist is not enough," Epstein said. "He must be a little bit of a spy, setting up contacts, pulling information from his sources all the while serving his audience and answering them. That is his basic purpose."

Comet may be viewed

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

Viewers who missed the opportunity of seeing the new comet, named IRAS-Araki-Alcock, last night near the Big Dipper, may be given a second opportunity depending on weather conditions tonight.

"The best time to view the comet was last night. It was closest to the earth then and could be seen with the naked eye. It should have appeared as a faint, fuzzy patch near the pointer stars in the Big Dipper," University of Massachusetts astronomer William Irvine said yesterday.

"However, the comet should have been visible early this morning. Viewers may also have a chance to see it tonight, although not as clearly," Irvine said.

The comet travels at a very fast rate of about 70,000 miles an hour, Irvine added.

He predicts that, "By tonight the comet will have traveled from the Big Dipper to somewhere near the constellation Leo."

This new comet was discovered about two weeks ago, Irvine said. It is named after the satellite and the two amateur astronomers who are credited with its discovery.

"We observe about 10 comets every year," Irvine said. "This one is special because it is the closest comet to come toward the earth in about 200 years. It won't appear again for many millions of years."

Five College scientists are studying the comet from one of the world's largest radiotelescopes, which is located at the Quabbin Reservoir.

"We will take turns, working in shifts, at viewing the comet from the observatory at the Reservoir," Irvine said.

Dead beaver possibly diseased

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

A beaver found dead in the center of Amherst this weekend may be one of a pair of infected beavers released from Tilson Farm but the animal was so badly scraped and damaged that it is unidentifiable, said the coordinator of the project that conducted experiments with the animals.

Wendell Dodge, director of the cooperative wildlife research unit at Tilson Farm, at the University of Massachusetts said the animal was found by Amherst police around midnight Sunday on Main Street in front of the College Drug Store. The animal was about the right size, he said, but it's ears were so badly damaged, that the ear tags had been scraped off and the animals identity could not be determined.

Dodge said the animal could have been hit by a car, but no one has admitted hitting an animal to police. He said it could also have been a prank: someone could have found it dead elsewhere and moved it to Amherst center.

Dodge said technicians would be examining the body in search of identifiable scars and marks that might determine whether the beaver is one of the pair being sought.

The infected beavers were released by unknown perpetrators April 29, by cutting the padlock of the Tilson Farm pen where they ahd been kept since Oct., 1981. Both beavers were infected with giardiasis disease, an illness that causes severe diarrhea in infected humans. The disease is transmitted from the feces of the beaver released in outdoor water sources used as drinking sources.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Graduates — a bleak look ahead?

After spending the last four years at UMass, seniors like myself will be graduated from the University on May 28. For some of us like myself, without a vacation to Europe mapped out or a job from daddy waiting to be taken, this graduation can be a pretty awesome feeling. The one thing all the seniors can be assured of is that they instantly become alumni, the Class of 1983.

Here's hoping that the Class of '83 fares a little bit better than previous classes. Sure, we've all read articles similar to the one in the Collegian's "Founder's Day" issue about all the successful graduates; but that's not quite the whole picture. After calling over 80 alumni and speaking at some length to over 20 a night twice a week working for the Alumni Office in its Telefund program, it's evident that a lot of alumni are a) out of a job; b) bitter about their University experience, or c) if they have a job, it's unsatisfying — certainly not ideal.

Elliott Kalb

I'm not a statistician — these are admittedly generalizations based on two months of part-time work. It certainly seems that only a small percentage of people are employed in the field of their choice. Most alumni that I have spoken to fall into one of these three categories:

1 — The Positive Alumnus — These are the alumni who give generously to the University. They still feel connected with the university, probably because they're successful in their personal or professional life. Many of these people met their future mate, or made lifelong friendships while at school. For these people, college truly was "the time of their life." There is probably an equal distribution of men and women, and in-state and out-of-staters in this category. Some of their occupations include restaurant owners, engineers, television producers, a real cross-section.

2 — The Indifferent or Apathetic Alumnus — These are the worst group of people to solicit for funds. The world owes them a living. They wake up in the morning, they pay their taxes, what more can anyone expect? These people are unhappy in their jobs, many are unhappy with their lives. These people do not feel any allegiance to the University — "times are tough all over." A lot of these indifferent alumni have children in college now, many went to another school in addition to UMass, many are housewives, many are recently out of school who are realizing the futility of a college diploma in the sour job market. There's a whole lot of these people. They're not statistics, they're individuals. A lot of them are disillusioned or bitter.

3 — The Complainer — Many of these alumni are previous donors to the University. Some are doctors, and most of them are older and a little conservative. One man said that "we have the sexual mores of cocker spaniels." One man didn't like the "racial balance" of the school. Many are concerned with the image of the University as a party school. In my opinion, complaints about drugs and alcohol are legitimate. The press has a way of building things up. The racists, bigots and crazies are beyond reason. The other type of complainer is young, one who had a negative university experience. They could have had the worst years of their life here at UMass, and want no reminder of it. They could have been unpopular, or had a bad living situation.

As we seniors venture out in the real world of collection agencies, 9-5 jobs and responsibility, it is unlikely that any of us will spend more than a few minutes recalling and reflecting our four years at UMass.

We as the Class of '83 can easily fall into these same categories. There may not be any Dr. Js or Richard Geres, but hopefully we all learned something more than how to drink large quantities of beer, and hopefully, we'll be successful both individually and as a class.

It's time to get out of here.

Is bigotry a problem now?

I would like to pose a question: Does bigotry exist on the University of Massachusetts campus?

An incident a few weeks ago indicated to me that despite having attended an institution of higher learning and having been exposed to the process of thinking and understanding differing concepts and viewpoints, some UMass students are extremely intolerant and this, to me, is bigotry in its purest form.

The incident of which I speak occured in the Campus Center concourse when a group of Arab students had a display which present their viewpoint on Israeli atrocities.

I personally watched the abuse that was given to this group both verbally and almost physically.

Without going into discussion and debate on who is right or who is wrong in the Middle East, let me say that under the precepts of American Democracy, the Arab students had every right to present their views and to seek public support.

David B. Miner

In a democracy, it is my right to agree or to disagree when someone expresses their opinion. But it is not my right or any other person's right to take any abusive actions which would hinder the person or group with whom they disagree from fully and freely expressing their feelings. There are better ways of handling such a situation and to express your opposing view.

A good example of this is when Teddy Roosevelt was Police Commissioner of New York City. A speaker who was known as a "Jew-baiter" scheduled a series of lectures on what he termed the "solution to the Jew problem." This speaker asked T.R. for police protection which put Roosevelt in a tough spot — he did not agree with what the speaker was advocating but, he recognized that the man was entitled to freely express his opinions. How Roosevelt solved the dilemma is a classic example of what can be done if one is able to sit down and use logic to solve a problem.

What he did was to obtain a list of every Jewish Police Officer in the Department and assign them to be this speaker's protection. T.R. then let this man know just who it was who was protecting him. The speaker left after giving only one of his series of speeches.

What does this have to do with the price of tea in China or what happened at UMass that day?

What I am suggesting is that whenever you are exposed to a differing viewpoint which may be completely opposite from yours — one which causes you to want to take strong action — sit down and try and come up with a creative rather than a distructive action.

If we don't learn to think before we act, then I fear that we will become, as the Prince in Romeo and Juliet said, "all punished."

Letters

Commentary author responds

To the Editor:

I did not write my May 6 (Picket line's purpose. . .) article to argue Hitler's ancestry. However because of the slander to my name and the Collegian I would like to say to Wheeler "Thou Shalt Not Kill." By Mr. Wheeler's slander he is trying to kill the purpose of my article.

The Encyclopedia Americana writes, "Little is known of Hitler's ancestry, his father Alois was the illegitimate son of a servant girl, Marianne Schickelgruber, who had worked possibly in a Jewish household — in Graz." When you say "HITLER IS NOT JEWISH!", are you referring to the faith of Judaism or the semitic tribe found in Jerusalem? The book The Making of Adolf Hitler by Eugene Davidson cites and argues an investigation by Frank Hans, "That Fraulein Schicklegruber had worked in the household of Jews named Frankenberger in Graz, in lower Austria, and that the father of the child she bore could have been the young son of the family she worked for."

First, to clarify things, I by no means commend the killing of Jews for the sake of an Aryan race. It should be noted that Mr. Wheeler based this on a quote which never, repeat, never appeared in my article.

Secondly, semite means "A member of any various ancient and modern peoples originating in Southwest Asia, among whom are the Hebrew and Arabs, according to Random House Dictionary. Lastly the Webster's International Dictionary defines semite as, "a member of any of a group of people of Southwestern Asia speaking semitic languages and chiefly represented now by the Jews and Arabs but in ancient times also by the Babylonians, Assyrians, Armeans, Cannanites, and Phoenicians." So how is supporting the sovereignty of the Palestinians making me anti-semitic?

Zionism is defined as, "a world-wide Jewish movement for the establishment in Palestine of a national homeland for the Jews." In the American College Dictionary Zionism is defined as, "a modern plan or movement to colonize Hebrews in Palestine." So there is a difference in being Anti-Zionist and being anti-semitic. I am neither. there should be a peaceful home land for all, and disobedience to the command." Thou Shalt Not Kill" is not justifiable by any means including Zionism! In common law those who attempt to murder are as guilty as convicted murderers. So, who owes whom an apology?

I will admit that all people belong to one common race, "the human race," and individuals must someday accept other's right to a peaceful existence without mental or physical invasion of unique identities. We must first accept our sovereignty in our own conscious kingdom, before we can actualize this right in daily experience.

Commencement 1983
10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 28
University of Massachusetts at Amherst

Instruction for Participants

All Candidates
There will be no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 28, 1983. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college.

Who is Eligible to Participate?

Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1983. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0535.

Master's degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 29, 1983 to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 29, 1983. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTHWEST end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities/Information Center and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early to ensure good seating. Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each undergraduate/graduate student will receive a packet of six formal invitations. Students are urged to encourage their guests to arrive early for good seating.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods

Undergraduate Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Master's Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., upon presentation of an I.D. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each Ph.D. candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the university will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A251 Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $26. (Five College Doctoral Hood—will be available at $44.95.)

Rentals for Faculty
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their rental orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS WEDNESDAY, MAY 18. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds if apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Szelewicki at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for Friday before Commencement. A limited number of rooms in University housing will be available for relatives and other guests the nights of May 27 and 28. Please contact the University Summer Conference Office, 918 Campus Center, 545-3400, by May 10. Fees: $15 single/$21 double, per night. B-52's bounce off the walls

WHAMMY! (Warner Bros.)
B-52's

By TIM MacPHEE
Collegian Staff

The B-52's: the bouffante's come down, but the sound hasn't.

The new B-52's album, WHAMMY!, clobbers you with pound and beat numbers that bounce off the walls of your mind long after you close the turntable's dust cover or remove your headphones.

WHAMMY! is the Athens, Georgia based band's fifth album and it's loaded with slick echo tricks and quick pounding beats that have characterized the B52's since their Rock Lobster days.

Side 1 begins with "Legal Tender", a moderate upbeat number about beating the economy by printing illegal tender in the basement.

This side also includes the song probably destined to receive the most airplay, "Whammy Kiss." Incorporated into this wild-beat number is such typical 52's fare as split vocals, echo tricks, and female two-part harmony. The track grabs your attention right away with its Devo-like electric keyboard rapping and pounding beat.

"Song for a Future Generation" is perhaps the most interesting offering from Side 1 — "Let's meet and have a baby now." This up-tempo track celebrates the need for the future generation while poking fun at traditional ways of making a generation. "Hey, my name is Keith and I'm a Scorpio from Athens G-A, and I like to find the essence from within."

The sound is so upbeat, "la, la, la la la," it almost brings to mind old Partridge Family tunes (picture Tracey mindlessly slamming a tambourine against her hip).

The last song on Side 1 is "Butterbean" — a fast-paced song about . . . butterbeans.

Side 2 offers five tracks, "Trism," "Queen of Las Vegas," "Don't Worry," "Big Bird," and an instrumental, "Work That Skirt."

"Trism" isn't a fast dance number, but has a good guitar hook which draws you into the story of a woman who needs to get home (through a prism) by sunset.

"Queen of Las Vegas" is an interesting exploration of a young girl's Las Vegas childhood, a childhood marked by a mother who wasn't around a lot and whose daddy was a "one-eyed jack of hearts." The story is accompanied by good synthesizer and guitar work.

"Big Bird" is a silly song about — you guessed it — a big bird flying over someone's house. Yes, it has a good beat, but the lyrics, well, my 9 year-old nephew could do better.

"Don't Worry" is not the most complex tune I've ever heard. Written by Yoko Ono, it is just the two words repeated (almost endlessly) in various vocal inflections.

The album winds down with "Work That Skirt," a very good fast number loaded with synthesizer, guitar, keyboard and . . . hard drum beat.

WHAMMY! marks a more diverse effort from the 5-member band. There are vocals on this record by all the band members instead of just from Fred Schnider, Cindy Wilson and Kate Peirson.

If you approach it from the right state of mind — a dancing mood, and don't take the lyrics too literally, I guarantee you'll have a good time with it.

So grab our best old dancin' sneakers and get moving.

Slap Happy, a Boston-based comedy, music, and juggling team, will perform from 12 to 2 p.m. on Monday, May 16 on Metwampee Lawn (rear of the Blue Wall). Formed three years ago, Slap Happy combines the comic genius of Jeff Ernstoff, Allan Jacobs, Jan Kirschner, and Brian O'Conner to create a brand nutty madness that the Boston Ledger has described as "bright, polished, witty, and hilariously funny." "This is a funny, don't-make-me-wet-my-pants-stuff," says another critic.

Jeff Ernstoff is Slap Happy's woodwind and percussion ace. Having received his graduate arts training in theater from Harvard, Ernstoff is no stranger to the stage.

Allan Jacobs, who has taught at none other than the Ringling Brothers and Barnum Bailey College in Florida, is Slap Happy's juggling wizard.

Jan Kirschner left his Ph.D. dissertation to join Slap Happy as a comedian and juggler.

Brian O'Conner, who in addition to Slap Happy co-directs the Living Poem Theater, is the group's artistic director.

Slap Happy's performance on Monday is sponsored by the Governor's Program Council and is free of charge.

Fitzgerald was a good sport

CHAMPIONS REMEMBERED
By Ray Fitzgerald
Steven Green
242 pages, $12.95

By ROBERT HATCH
Collegian Correspondent

While basking in the sun during the hot summer months, any sports enthusiast should take advantage of the free time to enhance their New England sports knowledge by reading Ray Fitzgerald's Champions Remembered.

Ray Fitzgerald covered sports in Boston for 16 years. He joined the Boston Globe in 1966 to follow the Red Sox, Patriots, and Celtics. At the time of his early death in August of 1982, Fitzgerald had won the Headliner Award for excellence in sports journalism and had received the Massachusetts Sportswriter Award eleven times. His latest work, Champions Remembered, was published posthumously. In this book, Fitzgerald picks the top Boston sports heroes of the modern era (1940 - 1980) in Baseball, Basketball, Hockey, Boxing and Running.

In the Preface, Fitzgerald sets the 'ground rules' for inclusion in this book. To be eligible for this book, an athlete must have been born in Massachusetts and made his mark someplace else, or vice-versa. Fitzgerald realizes that picking the very best of anything is difficult. But he feels this list is fun because it promotes argument or discussion. He says, "What fun would it be if it were decreed by law that chocolate chip was the number one ice cream flavor? Where would that leave the butter-pecan crowd?"

Fitzgerald presents warm mini-biographies of Boston's best. In Baseball, he discusses the love/hate relationship between Ted Williams and the Boston fans. His only other baseball hero is Carl Yaztremski, the man who replaced Ted Williams in the hearts of Bostonians. In basketball, he writes of John Havlicek, Bob Cousy, Dave Cowens, and Bill Russell. The Bruin greats remembered are Bobby Orr, Phil Esposito, Eddie Shore, and Milt Schmidt. The individual sports include local heroes like boxer Rocky Marciano, and marathoners Bill Rodgers and Johnny Kelley. He also has a chapter dedicated to local olympians along with Boston's own collegiate star, the 'Golden Greek,' Harry Agganis.

The book is filled with many interesting little anecdotes. With each individual, Fitzgerald gives the readers a personal look behind the 'Monday morning headlines.' Four-time Boston marathon champ Bill Rodgers smoked cigarettes every day for two years and at one time gave up running altogether. Dave Cowens during his career with the Celtics, drove a cab in Boston and once hitch-hiked to New Hampshire to lecture at a basketball camp. Of John Havlicek Fitzgerald wrote, "Teammates kidded Havlicek about his tidiness." Tommy Heinsohn, his first roommate and later his coach, said "He's the only guy I know, when he unpacks, puts his socks on hangars." Of Bobby Orr, he wrote: "Orr played hockey for a living, that's like saying Picasso drew pictures for a living. Orr played the game with the grace of a Bolshoi balleteer . . . When he was into his game, the Boston Garden was transformed into Swan Lake."

In Champions Remembered, Fitzgerald gives the reader a chance to feel a little nostalgia on some of Boston's sports heroes. He assembles humorous little anecdotes and stories of each of the stars. He quotes many of his fellow writers to add still more humor to his book. Through each of these anecdotes and stories, Fitzgerald is trying to familiarize the reader with the local heroes he considered Boston's best.

The book was very well written and organized. Once I began reading, I found it very difficult to put down. Fitzgerald gave me the impression that he was speaking form the heart, he took a real interest in each of these individuals. He cared for them.

However, the book was not what I expected. I have been an admirer of Ray Fitzgerald for many years. Each of his columns was very humorous and imaginative. I recall one in particular in which he played the role of a used car salesman and compared the Red Sox pitching staff to automobiles. Ironically the column was written during the hard times of the American Auto Industry. The book does not contain this type of imaginative humor. Although it contains humorous anecdotes, the book left me with a feeling of sadness. The early deaths of Harry Agganis and Rocky Marciano and Bobby Orr's early retirement, were all spots of melancholy. Perhaps the feeling of sadness can be attributed to the realization that this is Fitzgerald's own last work.

Though the book covers many different sports and sports figures, it fails to mention any football players or coaches. Jim Nance and John Hannah, considered by many the best lineman to play the game, are worthy of being remembered. For coaches, one must consider the flamboyant and successful Don Cherry, former coach of the Bruins or Red Auerbach of the Boston Celtics.

Needless to say I enjoyed the book immensely. Fitzgerald wrote Champions Remembered with fondness and perception about these sports heroes 'who came to play' and made their mark in the history books of their sports. For the thousands of Ray Fitzgerald admirers, this is a worthy addition to their collections. I would recommend Champions Remembered as it's yet another fabulous work by the late Ray Fitzgerald.

Committee formed to investigate racial problems

By RHONDA SWAN
Collegian Staff

In view of the increasing numbers of reported incidents involving racial harassment within the university community, Chancellor Joseph Duffey has formed a special committee to investigate and propose possible solutions to the growing problems. Duffey met with the members of the committee yesterday to discuss the immediate and future plans of the various university departments for improvement.

Sarah Boy, Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor of student affairs, was asked to report on the coordination of service providers and documentation. Boy feels that changes are needed to improve the climate in which minority students must function.

Lou Fischer, Associate to the Chancellor, reported on the rules, regulations and sanctions regarding racial harassment. Fischer said that the University is not without rules regarding racial harassment, but the problem is with people's false notions about their legal rights.

"People think that the First Amendment protects them from everything," Fischer said. However, Fischer noted, that freedom of speech does not apply to verbal harassment which is a punishable crime.

In her report, Thelma Griffith-Johnson, Affirmative Action Director, was asked to report on the conduct of key agencies and faculty administrators. Since it is the job of the Dean of Student's office to deal with the concerns of students, Griffith-Johnson's committee suggested that there be an increase in minority presence in the office in order to insure that effective confident referrals be made.

Griffith-Johnson also said that one of the most pressing problems is that "most people on the campus don't fear any disciplinary action for abhorrent behavior."

Vincent Dethier, a professor at the university also noted that the faculty is not guided by any constraints in regard to harassment.

In addition to the special reports, individual committee members addressed some other needs of the university in dealing with racial problems.

Conference to address Black union's future

By TRACY ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

Several days before the highly publicized mayoral primary in Philadelphia, the A. Philip Randolph Institute will hold its 14th annual National Conference in the City of Brotherly Love.

Over 750 black trade unionists and community leaders will gather there from May 13th to 15th, making this the most significant national gathering of black trade unionists of the year.

Among the leaders who will address the conference are United States Senator Frank Lautenberg, D-New Jersey, Representative William Gray, D-Pennsylvania, Philadelphia mayoral candidate Wilson Goode; civil rights leader Bayard Rustin; Moe Biller, President of the American Postal Workers Union; Leon Lynch, Executive vice-president of the United Steelworkers; Andrew Zulu, vice-president of the Federation of South African Trade Unions; AFL-CIO National vice-presidents Barbara Hutchinson and Frederick O'Neal; and Norman Hill, President of the A. Philip Randolph Institute.

The speakers will focus on conference theme: "New Economic Realities: The Future of the Labor-Black Alliance."

Keynote addresses to the opening sessions will be given by Philadelphia City Council President Joseph Coleman.

The conference keynote address will also be given by A. Philip Randolph Institute President Norman Hill.

Hill's address will focus on the analysis of the effects of the recession on black workers, and on a political strategy for rebuilding and strengthening the coalition between blacks and organized labor.

Senator Frank Lautenberg will deliver a speech on the effects of Reaganomics on blacks and all working people. Celebrating his 20th anniversary as principal organizer of the 1963 March on Washington for jobs is Bayard Rustin.

Mr. Rustin, a prominent civil rights leader, serves as Randolph Institute's National Chairman.

Rep. Bill Gray, Philadelphia AFL-CIO President Edward Toohey, and Bayard Rustin will speak at a general session on "New Economic Realities and Black Americans."

Principal speakers will be Dr. Bernard Anderson and Gus Tyler.

Dr. Anderson is Director of the Social Services Division of the Rockefeller Foundation and Professor of Industry at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Tyler is Assistant President of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union.

Renowned contralto Marion Anderson will be presented with the prestigious A. Philip Randolph Freedom award, the organizations highest honor. The award is being given in recognition of her contributions to the struggle for freedom and human dignity.

William Burrus, Executive Vice-President of the American Postal Workers Union will be presented with the Randolph Achievement Award in recognition of his outstanding contributions to trade unionism and civil rights.

The A. Philip Randolph Institute is a national organization of black trade Unionists. It has 18,000 members nationwide and its 180 affiliates are active in 36 states.

The Institute conducts voter registration drives, a trade union intern program, and grassroots legislative lobbying efforts nationwide.

Max Roach Quartet and the University Jazz Ensemble excite at free concert

By LOUIS ALFRED III
Collegian Correspondent

The performance Thursday night by the University of Massachusetts Jazz Ensemble was an event that was extra special in two respects. First, there was a feature performance by the Max Roach Quartet, and second there was the presentation of the Fletcher Henderson Scholarship Award.

The Fletcher Henderson Award was honored to the Afro-American Jazz Major that has displayed outstanding performance in their respective majors. This year's scholarship was shared by saxophonist Pete Levesuqe, and vocalist Kate McGarry.

The performance of the UMass Jazz Ensemble I displayed the fine talent of its members in excellent form. Their repertoire included diverse musical selections ranging from the uptempo big band jazz sound of That Jones' Cherry Juice to the more contemporary sound of Stanley Clarke's Bass Folk Song.

After a brief intermission, Max Roach appeared on stage to present the Fletcher Henderson Scholarship Award. Henderson, a black composer from the 1920s was named as a prime source for the big band style music that was made famous during the 40s. Then Max Roach proceeded to perform a drum solo in the form of a ballad.

This solo spot was an excellent opportunity to observe the extraordinary technique of Max Roach. Roach, who was a pioneer of the bebop era, along with Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker, then introduced the other members of his Quartet.

This included trumpeter Cecil Bridgewater, Odean Pope on Tenor Saxophone, and Calvin Hill on Acoustic Bass. Upon introduction the Quartet played "Giant Steps," an uptempo tune written by John Coltrane.

This featured Odean Pope's saxophone. The next selection was "In A Sentimental Mood," by jazz great Duke Ellington.

This featured trumpeter Cecil Bridgewater and bassist Calvin Hill. Bridgewater's performance was marked by a very beautiful lyrical solo that held one captive throughout its duration.

Calvin Hill also displayed a spotless solo on a bass that has a sound as deep and broad as it is old (almost 250 years old).

The next tune was a Charlie Parker bop tune entitled "Confirmation." This selection produced excellent solos by Odean Pope who demonstrateu astounding technique, Cecil Bridgewater and Max Roach. The last selection "Oleo," by Sonny Rollins featured the UMass Jazz Ensemble and the Quartet together.

It was an excellent way to bring the event to a close. Indeed it was a fine performance by all musicians involved.

Who benefited most in Beirut bombing?

By MUHAMMAD ABBAD
Special to Black Affairs

On September 1, 1982, after Ronald Reagan claimed to be presenting an alternative to the already dead Camp David agreement, within a few hours, Mr. Begin declared that Israel would not even discuss the new plan.

Unable to exert any pressure on their belligerent ally in the Middle East, Israel, the cold warriors of the Reagan Administration have miserably failed to bring about the withdrawal of occupying Israeli troops from Southern Lebanon (if we assume that they had any interest to do so!).

At a time of rising tension in the Israeli American relations, and with the Israelis becoming more impatient for the presence of a multi-national peace keeping force (including American troops) in Lebanon, which at least momentarily stops the bloodthirsty commanders of Mr. Begin from finishing their plans to exterminate the Palestinians, and to annex most of Lebanon and to destroy the Lebanese progressive forces, the U.S embassy in Beirut is blown up in an explosion which resulted in the killing of 40 people.

Editorial

Who's responsible? At this point it is impossible to reproduce any well founded evidence. But we can rephrase the question: Who could have benefitted the most from that attack? Or better put, what could have been the motives for the attack?

1. To get the Americans to pull out of Lebanon and thus leaving free hands for the invading Zionist forces to carry out an even fiercer repression.

2. To prove that the Lebanese authorities still cannot maintain law and order even in their city, thus showing the necessity for a foreign invading force. This latter point was cynically raised after the explosion by many Israeli ministers.

As a leading London magazine, The Economist, has pointed out: "For months the Israelis have argued that it was American presnce that was blocking an Israeli-Lebanese agreement . . . The Israelis had motives (for that explosion)," (April 23).

On the other hand it would be naive for anybody to think that after butchering more than two thousand people in Sabra and Shatile, and after massacring tens of thousands of Palestines in Lebanese in Lebanon after having destroyed most of the Lebanese capital of Beirut, it would present any moral dilemma to Mr. Begin's thugs to kill 40 more innocent people.

Announcements

ARCHIE SHEPP and ANDREW SALKEY will be reading poetry at the Jones Library, in Amherst for their May Reading Series. Both men are outstanding writers and will offer examples to anyone interested in good literature. This will all take place May 17th, at 8 p.m. at Burnett Gallery and there will be no admission charge.

Archie Shepp — renowned saxophonist, playwright and professor of Music and Afro-American Studies at the University of Massachusetts is author of "Junebug Graduates Tonight," The Black Drama Anthology. He has a recent album recorded in Europe featuring his poem, "Mama Rose." Among his many awards, Professor Shepp was voted by Downbeat's International Music Critic's poll in 1982, tenor saxophonist of the year.

Andrew Salkey — Jamaican poet and novelist, is professor of writing at Hampshire College. He has written over 25 books, some of which are for children and translations. He is a director and literary editor of New Beacon Books and Bogle-L'Ouverture Publications, London.

Kathryn Marshall — won a Massachusetts Artists fellowship this year. Her novels include My Sister Cone, Desert Places and a short story in her work: Stories by Texas Women. She's active in writing reviews.

ATTENTION: All members of the Third World Organization are invited to a meeting at Yvonne's Place, 5:30 p.m. and the Campus Center Rooms 805-809, 6:30 p.m.

Art Hillson, Director of Placement Services will be the featured guest speaker at the Third World Caucus' weekly meeting tonight at 6:30 in the Campus Center. This will take place in Room 169.

Softball has great season despite no NCAA bid

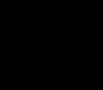
The softball diamond at the NOPE playing fields sat silent yesterday. It wasn't because of the cold weather. UMass wanted to practice.

The University of Massachusetts softball team had yesterday off as well as today and tomorrow. The University of Rhode Island is going to play in the weekend's NCAA tournament, not the Minutewomen.

The Minutewomen, who posted a record setting 28-10 record, were bitterly disappointed for the third year in a row.

"It's really sad," said coach Elaine Sortino. "This was the finest team we've ever had. I guess it wasn't meant to be."

"It was so disappointing," said All-American catcher Jackie Gaw "because it seemed that the first part of the season didn't mean anything.



Gerry de Simas

"There is something special about representing your school in national competition," said Gaw softly.

URI, peaked towards the end of the season, while UMass after a blazing 20-4 start stumbled taking only (?) eight of their last 14.

The selection committee picked URI, who on two long drives down the left field line that hit fair and then bounced foul scoring two runs, beat UMass twice.

The most pivotal point of the season was the Atlantic 10 championships at Penn State, where UM lost to Penn St., 3-0 and URI 3-2.

"Nothing hurt us more than what we didn't do at the conference championships," said Sortino. "It was a critical weekend. We all knew it."

Yet, even though it took UMass out of the playoff driver's seat, they played tough taking five of their last seven games. It was almost good enough.

UMass showed it's character with two comeback wins over Springfield. UMass showed how tough it was in winning two of three from Rutgers. UMass showed that they're a team to be reckoned with, nationally, after defeating South Carolina 1-0 in March.

And that is what is so disappointing about the NCAA. UMass didn't even have a chance to prove themselves. There is no regional tourney and UMass is just as good as some of the teams in the tournament (namely URI.)

But, as Elaine Sortino said, "We had our chances."

So the 1983 Minutewomen season is history along with performances of their stellar athletes. Lynn Stockley tossed a no-hitter against New Hampshire and she and Cathy Reed both narrowly missed others.

"The pitching by the two freshmen (Stockley and Reed) were above my expectations," said Sortino. "They were super." Stockley came close to 100 strikeouts on the year.

Freshmen played an important part in this winning machine. Sally Maher (1B), outfielder/catcher Beth Talbott, and DH's Ann Ringrose and Janet Miller saw lots of action this year.

"In the early part of the season it was the young kids that played a big part in the wins," said Sortino.

Junior Allyson Rioux showed time and time again why she is All-American with many super, super plays in the pivot. And Tina Coffin was a speedy, steady force in the outfield along with Missy Oman, a powerful hitter.

Seniors Chris Coughlin, Debbie Pickett and Mary Ann Lombardi had great years. Coughlin was in a hot corner at third this year and she lifted UMass with a game winning double against Springfield.

The Minutewomen didn't get their paths crossed too often this year but the path didn't lead to the NCAA playoffs. Chris Coughlin bats while Janet Miller waits on deck.

Pickett came on strong defensively and offensively. Defensively she has some outstanding catches and she aced some clutch hits down the stretch.

Lombardi, after returning from South Carolina batting around .100 ended up with a .300 plus average. It was her best ever.

And then there is Jackie Gaw. She was the player you wanted up in a pinch. She hit .461 this year and hit .400 plus for all four of her varsity career. She owns who-knows-how many school records for batting. She was an All-American in every sense of the word. She played hurt, singled, doubled, tripled and hit home runs when you needed them, and was a real leader.

Ten players will return next year, to form a competitive nucleus to form a winner around. But Gaw and the seniors will not be back.

"The four seniors are great achievers as softball players and as people," said Sortino.

The NCAA selection committee didn't know what it was missing when they bypassed Massachusetts(again!).

Baseball ends regular season, playoffs loom

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

The roller-coaster season of the University of Massachusetts men's baseball team finally came to an end yesterday as the Minutemen split a doubleheader with Dartmouth College, winning the first game 6-3 and losing the nightcap, no, this is not a typo, 18-14.

But while UMass (18-16 overall, 9-5 in the ECAC) ends one season, they begin another starting Thursday when they travel to McCoy Stadium in Pawtucket, Rhode Island to take on the University of Connecticut at 5 p.m. in the first round of the ECAC northeast playoffs.

In game one of yesterday's play, Dartmouth jumped out early against pitcher Adam Grossman. Roberto Belaguer knocked in runs in the first and third innings, giving the Big Green a 2-0 lead. UMass, trailing 3-0 in the fourth, came back with a run as Todd Comeau doubled in Chris Waszczuk.

UMass had runners on second and third in the fifth, with Bruce Emerson coming up. Emerson, who has come through in the clutch time and time again, did it once more, delivering a single and tying the ballgame at 3-3. Emerson eventually went to third, where he was brought home by Waszczuk with a sacrifice fly.

Scott Foster came into pitch for the Minutemen in the sixth, and he set down the side in order, mostly thanks to third baseman Andy Conners. Conners stole a double away from Tim Whall as he dove to his backhand side and gunned Whall down.

UMass added some insurance runs in the bottom of the sixth. After a walk to Comeau, Angelo Salustri delivered a deep triple to center field, scoring Comeau. With Salustri on third, Conners showed he could do it with the bat as well as the glove, laying down a beautiful suicide squeeze bunt to give UMass a 6-3 lead.

Tony Presnal pitched the final inning for UMass (doubleheaders are only 7 innings long) and ended it with two strikeouts, getting his first save for Grossman, who got his first win. Craig Coylyer took the loss.

The second game was not exactly what one would call a "pitchers' duel." Dartmouth got out of the starting blocks quickly, chasing starter Bob Kostro with four runs in the top of the first. Belaguer drove in two runs with a single, and Pat Lavery and Whall each drove in one. UMass cut that lead to 4-1 courtesy of an Emerson home run, his second of the season.

In a game where every inning saw someone score, UMass closed the gap to 4-2, as Todd Ezold doubled home Salustri. With John Martin now the UMass pitcher, Dartmouth got another run in the third on a Whall sacrifice fly.

The Big Green increased that lead to 9-2 as Pat Lavery knocked in two runs with a triple and Belaguer hit a two-run homer. All of this was off new pitcher Matt Subocz.

The bottom of the fourth, however, is where the floodgates opened for UMass.

UMass scored four runs without registering an out. Once again, Emerson got another clutch hit, driving in two. Salustri singled in two, and after a Jeff Cimini sacrifice fly, it was 9-9. Don't go away yet folks. Conners reached on an error, and Jack Bloise drove in two with a single. When the dust cleared, it was 12-9 UMass.

Salustri and Cimini singled in runs in the fifth, and UMass had a commanding 14-9 lead — at least they thought they did. Jim Gallagher couldn't hold the lead as Dartmouth closed the gap to 14-12.

Then, disaster struck in the seventh with Dave Valdanbrini on the mound. Belaguer hit his second home run of the game to tie it up, and Dartmouth tallied four more runs on a single and error to win game two.

All in all, head coach Dick Bergquist was pleased with this season.

"After the 2-10 start, we started to play with confidence. Our defense improved which was a big key in our turnaround," said Bergquist.

When facing UConn, Bergquist thinks, the key is to hold them to 3-5 runs. He will go with Emerson in game one.

Gorillas get needed win

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

GREENVALE, N.Y. — The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team must be feeling better today because a win was just what the doctor ordered to cure their illness.

After an emotionaly and physically draining weekend that saw them bow to second ranked Syracuse 15-7 and eighth ranked Maryland 13-4, the Gorillas limped to Long Island to play C.W. Post and walked away with a 8-7 victory.

It was the type of game the Gorillas have had trouble winning the entire year. The tight games that come down to the final minutes when one bad shot or one defensive lapse had cost them the game. This day, at least, was different.

Tom Lukacovic (two goals and an assist) took a pass from Tom Aldrich with just 1:45 remaining in the game to give the Gorillas only their second road win of the year.

Lukacovic opened the scoring in the first period just 2:05 into the game when he beat the Post goaltender for an unassisted goal.

Then Mike Fiorini took a feed from Lukacovic and scored nine seconds later to push the Gorillas lead to 2-0. Post answered with their first two tallies before Chris Schmitz, who is suffering from a strep throat, whipped in the first of his two goals of the day and UMass led 3-2 after one quarter.

The second period saw very little in the way of offensive productivity. All the Gorillas could muster was an unassisted goal by Rich Messina but the Gorillas held a 4-3 halftime lead.

Both Messina and Schmitz scored their second goals of the game in the third period but Post blew three shots by Altschuler in the third period to creep ahead 6 - 5 after three periods.

Then came the fourth quarter. A period of time that has yielded more pain than pleasure this year for the Gorillas turned out for the best this time around.

Paul Fogarty scored 2:26 into the period to give UMass a 7-6 lead but Tom Sanders scored for Post before Lukacovis came up with the winning goal to send the Gorillas home with a well-earned victory.

Akeem, why Houston?

The big day is still over six weeks away. It is a big day, that is, if you happen to be one of the million or so basketball fans in this country. It will be late in June when the NBA powers knock heads and draft college hoops most sought after plays.

Another big day is right around the corner, though. Sometime within the next week those college superstars who in their own mind believe they were born a year or two late, and therefore won't graduate this year, must decide whether or not to jump to the pros.

Russ Whinnem

Two weeks ago it happened. Just after saying he would stay in school, Akeem Ohdul-Olajuwan, without question one of the most sought after players, said he would make the jump if he was guaranteed to be drafted by the Houston Rockets. Whoooaaa!

Akeem, think about what you're saying. We are talking the HOUSTON ROCKETS here. You know, the Western Conferences version of the Cleveland Caveliers. They are a team which in two years has gone from a championship finalist to one of the three NBA teams you wouldn't even bring a non-hoop fan to see. Even they would know something was wrong.

Akeem, you say you love the city and want to make a career there. It is also the first city you lived in upon coming to the U.S. a couple years ago. Any city would have welcomed you in their basketball program, with your awesome talent.

If you had stepped out of a taxi at San Diego St. you would've loved California. Everyone would have been nice to you there, too. They all know you're a potential franchise. Then, the clippers would be after you, (by the way, also a bad bet).

You also say that what your good friend and teammate Clyde Drexler decides to do on the same topic will influence you. Okay Akeem, I can see that. Close friendships run deep. How abot this, though. You convince Clyde to stay at school and you guys take another shot (and you do have the talent) at an NCAA championship.

Wouldn't that be better? Back to the happy life of being a college superstar and maybe winning the title together. Wouldn't it be better — better than playing for the Houston Rockets?

Think about it, Akeem. The HOUSTON ROCKETS — the earliest team this year to be mathematically eliminated from the playoffs. Stay in school. Deals can be made, believe me. Deals that would get you to a high caliber club, a club that wins a lot, a club that has a long tradition of winning. Come to think of it, Akeem, have you ever met Red Auerbach. . . .

Women's tennis on upswing

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

If improvement is the name of the game, then the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team came close to mastering that game this spring.

The netwomen improved on a poor 3-8 record in the fall and posted a fine 7-4 under rookie head coach Pat Stewart, who assumed her duties only five days before the first match.

"It was definitely a turnaround semester," said Stewart. "They really got back on their feet from the fall."

UMass dropped their last match of the year to Brown, 7-2, but Stewart said "we played some of the best tennis all season. It was their best match."

Top players on the Minutewomen this year were Nancy Bolger (3) and Chris Frazier (4), who both won for UMass against Brown.

Bolger went 7-4 on the season and Frazier had the team's top record at 9-2. Ariel Fowler went 5-3 at number one.

"They did a terrific job," said Stewart. "They put in a lot of hard work and did very well."

Ten of the fourteen players will be returning next fall. UMass will lose Bolger, Fowler, and Beth Goldberg, a doubles player.

But, Elizabeth Sullivan (2), Frazier, Trish Sullivan (5) and Karen Orlowski will be back. Maureen Hanlon and Wendy Scheerer (1) will also be back heading up the doubles teams.

After a successful spring, the netwomen could do nothing else but look optimistically towards the fall.

Sports Notices

Undergraduate students must turn in their gym clothes, towels, and locks signed out this semester to the equipment rooms (Boyden or NOPE) from where they were assigned no later than 5 p.m., Thursday, May 26. Students will be billed for items not returned through the Bursar's office.

Amherst Town Meeting rejects rent control, limits condo conversion

By MITCH ZEMEL
Collegian Correspondent

Rent control was defeated last night at the Amherst Town Meeting for the ninth time in the last ten years, according to Ken Mozokowski, chairman of the Housing Authority and a Town Meeting member for ten years.

It was defeated 111 to 116. A two-thirds majority was needed to pass the article.

The article, if approved, would have asked the state to pass legislation giving Amherst permission to write a by-law establishing a rent control board.

"I've seen it fail eight times (before last night's vote)," Mozokowski said in a plea to pass the bill. "It will be back again and again and again, until some form of legislation passes and some by-law is written."

The article was debated for two hours, and the arguments were often heated.

"We live in a society where we charge as much as the traffic will bear," said Michael Sullivan, a Town Meeting member. He also said that voting for rent control will allow the people of Amherst to decide their future.

"Any rent control board can act in any manner they see fit," said Robert Chisholm, "and I caution you to that. Rent control is ostensibly designed to diminish the profits of landlords."

When a rent control board sets rent limits, it decides what expenses are avoidable. Chisholm said that in Brookline, painting less than every six years is an avoidable expense. "Rent control assures that housing will be cheap (shoddy)," he said.

Two articles dealing with cooperative and condominium conversions were passed. If the rental unit vacancy rate is less than five percent, a rental unit cannot be converted to a condominium or cooperative unit. The estimated vacancy rate for Amherst is three percent.

When an apartment complex is to be converted to a condominium, the renter must vacate the apartment by a specified date. Because rental vacancies are limited in Amherst, the evicted renter often experiences difficulties in renting another unit.

One Town Meeting member, who is currently a renter in an apartment complex that is undergoing conversion to a condominium, said it "is always disruptive," and she always feels insecure about whether she will be evicted because the condominium has been purchased.

There have been two apartments converted to condominiums in the last few years. These are the Jeffrey Amherst Manor and Northeast Terrace. At the Northeast Terrace, only four of the eighteen condominiums have been purchased.

"I think it would be a very bad law," said one town meeting member. "It is a basic right we have to handle our poverty the way that we want."

Frederck Rice, director of the Planning Board, said, "This is a diverse town, and all people who want to rent should be welcome."

Robet Chisholm, a Town Meeting member, said, "The town of Amherst is the hub of an economic market—that market being housing."

Students lose study space to Conference Services office

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Study space on the ninth floor of the Campus Center will be cut in half to accomodate an additional Conference Services office, Ron Keefe, chair of the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG), said yesterday.

Keefe said he was notified yesterday by William Harris, director of the Campus Center, that the renovations would take place this summer and that the BOG had no say in the matter.

Harris denied the allegation and refused further comment until he speaks with Keefe.

"He's ignoring the needs of students and the student government to say that he's going to take this space," Keefe said, referring to the couches and tables that are frequented by about 30 students daily. "Commuters rely on study space."

Keefe said Harris told him the space is poorly used and the same number of students could be accomodated in a smaller area.

Keefe said there is always a space problem in the Campus Center and that the BOG has been working to balance the needs of students and administration in the complex.

"As different areas grow, people want space," he said, noting that Harris had spoken to him about forming "a committee to evaluate all the needs of the Campus Center and come up with some long range strategic planning."

Keefe said the situation was similar to recent proposals to turn the coffee shop into a mini store and the Music and Reading Room into a computer room. These actions were halted by student opposition and petition, he said, although it is too late in the semester to gain support to save the study space.

Administrative moves such as this are often planned for the summer when there are no student activists on campus to stop them, he said.

Students studying in the area yesterday expressed disbelief at the motion.

"There's already a lack of space (for studying)," said one 24-year-old electrical engineering student who wished to remain anonymous. "It'll be too noisy to do anything (with an office next door)."

"It's too bad -- I've seen a lot of people up here," said Michael Lombardi, a 20-year-old sophomore majoring in animal science who said he studies in the lounge four times a week.

"There isn't enough room up here as it is," said Larry "LP" Pritika, a 22 year old zoology major. "It'd be a shame."

1984 SGA budget passes in Senate with few problems

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

After some last-minute problems with a possible deficit, the Undergraduate Student Senate last night passed the 1984 Budget Act, which funds all Recognized Student Organizations (RSOs).

The Senate finally allocated $1,143,703, to 54 RSOs, including the Student Activities Office (SAO) and the Five College Bus System. This was $2,733 more than the original 1984 Budget Act's recommendations.

The $2,733 additions were the result of corrections made individual student groups' budgets after the Budget Act was printed. Since the original Act presented a perfectly balanced budget, the $2,733 deficit had to be eliminated before the Senate could pass the final Act.

The budget was balanced by increasing the projected returning (unused) Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) monies from $84,200 to $86,933.

Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan said since the returning SATF figure is always a conservative one, there would be no problem in increasing it.

The Senate briefly reviewed the budget for every student group, comparing them with the 1983 budgets, before passing the final act. No changes were made in any RSO budgets at the meeting.

The $1,143,703 the Senate Budgets Committee allocates to student groups is only part of the $1.84 million SATF revenue allocated by the Act. The rest of the money goes to the Area Governments, the Pioneer Valley Transit System, the Union Program Council, and other accounts which are automatically funded, without Senate Review.

The largest single increase in any RSO budgetthis year was $13,009 to the Off Campus Housing Office (OCHO). This office has never been funded by the Senate before. Sullivan said the office used to be funded primarily by the Commuter Area Government, but that organization was too financially strained this year to afford it.

"Their (OCHO) budget will be taking a cut," Sullivan said. "It's just that we'll be picking up a greater part of it."

Sullivan said the Commuter Area government will be contributing $15,000 and the graduate Student Senate will contribute $3,000 to OCHO's $28,000 budget.

Although Budgets Committee Chair Eugene Bull said earlier this week that neither the Outing Club nor the University Judiciary would be funded this year, because neither had submitted a budget proposal to the committee, both organizations were level-funded in the final budget act.

Senate debates budget deficit and tax cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-controlled Senate moved uncertainly toward a showdown yesterday on the 1984 budget over whether to embrace a plan that threatens President Reagan's tax cuts or another that preserves them at the cost of higher deficits.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said he was "mildly optimistic" of getting 51 GOP votes — the necessary majority — for approval of the low-tax, high-deficit spending plan embraced by the president.

The alternative approach, put together by five Republican moderates, called for raising taxes by $14.3 billion in 1984 and $70 billion over three years as part of a plan to force budget deficits down.

The five — Sens. John Chafee of Rhode Island, Mark Hatfield of Oregon, Charles Mathias of Maryland, Robert Stafford of Vermont and Lowell Weicker of Connecticut — were under pressure from Baker to offer their proposal first.

According to several sources, Baker's hope was that Chafee and his colleagues would lose when too few Democrats supported their proposal, and then would join other Republicans in voting for the Baker-endorsed plan.

But aides said the five moderates were reluctant to offer their plan first, for fear it would fail.

Democrats, whose unanimous support is necessary for the moderate GOP plan to succeed, were expected to meet privately to plan their strategy.

Russian writer knocks anti-nuke protestors

LONDON (AP) — Exiled Russian writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn said yesterday that anti-nuclear protesters in the West are blind to a threat from the Soviet Union and don't know the difference between good and evil.

He said the late English philosopher Bertrand Russell was wrong when he suggested it was better to be red than dead.

"Just as lobsters are thrown into boiling water and gradually turn red, so under Communism some die immediately and some take a little longer," the Nobel prize winner, exiled in 1974, said in a rare meeting with reporters.

Accusing young disarmament campaigners of having their "eyes bound" about the Soviet government and lacking any concept of "absolute good and absolute evil," Solzhenitsyn said:

"They are against any kind of struggle at all. They just want to give up altogether. They feel their carefree existence will go on forever.

"They believe Bertrand Russell that it's better to be red than dead. But here even Bertrand Russell was mentally lacking: he saw an alternative where there is none, because to be red means to become dead gradually."

Russell, who died in 1970 at age 98, helped inspire the nuclear protest movement and said in 1958 that "if the Communists conquered the world, it would be very unpleasant for a while but not forever." Some characterized the remark as a "better red than dead" outlook.

Dukakis promises to attempt to avoid imposing new taxes

BOSTON — Faced with new estimates that show revenue lagging behind earlier predictions, Gov. Michael Dukakis said yesterday that he hopes to avoid imposing new taxes, but he stopped short of a guarantee.

"We are going to do everything we can to avoid that and try to balance the budget without it," Dukakis told reporters. "My sense is we can and will."

Frank Keefe, Dukakis' secretary of administration, said there may be some additions to the governor's "revenue enforcement and protection program," recommended to the Legislature in March when Dukakis filed his proposed fiscal 1984 budget.

"Maybe some loophole-closing, stiffer enforcement," he said in an interview. A major tax increase "would be a last resort."

The revenue package that Dukakis filed with his proposed $7.36 billion spending bill included a hike in the gasoline tax, which already is law, and a cigarette tax hike, along with about 20 other measures aimed primarily at enforcement and loopholes.

Court rules Revere roadblocks on drunks unconstitutional

BOSTON — The state Supreme Court ruled yesterday that roadblocks set up by Revere police to catch drunken drivers were unconstitutional.

The court affirmed the dismissal of complaints against six motorists by Chelsea District Court Judge Robert Stanziani.

The charges ranged from driving under the influence of intoxicating liquor to possession of controlled substances and unlawfully carrying a knife. The roadblock, highly publicized at the time, was at North Shore Road and Mills Avenue the night of Jan. 15, 1982.

The court majority, in its first ruling on the lawfulness of roadblocks, held that the Revere roadblock violated the constitutional guarantee against illegal search and seizure.

However, the opinion written by Justice Francis J. O'Connor suggested guidelines by which future roadblocks might pass muster: Cars cannot be stopped arbitrarily, and safety and convenience must be considered.

Justice Joseph R. Nolan dissented, saying that the Revere roadblocks satisfied the court's criteria and that many of lower court's findings "are unsupported by the evidence."

Nun decides to quit church to continue 'serving the poor'

LANSING, Mich. — Saying that "in my heart, I'm still a nun," Agnes Mansour announced yesterday she has quit her religious order so she can continue "serving the poor" as Michigan's welfare director.

Miss Mansour, as a member of the Sisters of Mercy, had been under fire from the Roman Catholic church because the Department of Social Services which she heads pays for poor women's abortions through the Medicaid program.

The 52-year-old nun was told Monday by a representative of Pope John Paul II that she would be dismissed from the order unless she resigned.

Leverett town meeting bans nuclear warheads from area

LEVERETT — Attention defense ministers: it is now illegal to drop a nuclear warhead on Leverett — by order of the selectmen and a vote of the town meeting.

And to make sure the word gets out, selectmen decided to put up signs on the three or four roads entering this town of 1,000 people in the wild hills of western Massachusetts declaring it a "Nuclear Free Zone."

The selectmen also voted Monday to send a copy of the town meeting's resolution and a letter explaining it to President Reagan and the ambassadors of countries with known or suspected nuclear arsenals, including China, India, Israel, South Africa, the Soviet Union, Great Britain and France.

The "Nuclear Free Zone" established by the town meeting last Saturday prohibits the design, production, deployment, transportation, disposal, or storage of nuclear weapons, nuclear energy, fuel or wastes in Leverett.

Newman priest cites nuke threat

By CHRIS FERRETTI
Collegian Staff

The letter drafted by the Bishop's Conference last Tuesday denouncing the nuclear arms race has turned a political issue into a moral one, said Rev. Joseph Marchese of the University of Massachusetts Newman Center.

The Roman Catholic Bishop's Conference of the United States ratified the 45,000 word letter by a vote of 238 to 9 calling upon Catholics and "all men and women of good will to make peacemaking their most important spiritual and worldly goal."

"We are the first generation since Genesis with the power to virtually destroy God's creation," the letter said. "We cannot remain silent in the face of such danger."

"Students do not understand the gravity of the situation." Marchese said. "This letter is one of the most important statements the church has made in the twentieth century."

Students appear to be more concerned about getting accepted into law school or securing a job in an accounting firm than they are with the world around them, Marchese said.

It (the nuclear arms issue) is an issue that has gained vital importance and the only reaction that I have received on campus have come from staff and faculty not from the students," he said.

"Students should be more concerned with their capacity to listen, to discern critically," he said.

President Reagan's defense philosophies are an example of the success that simplistic and one dimensional arguments can have on people, Marchese continued.

"The letter was written in response to this problem. It seeks to show that there is no such thing as limited nuclear warfare," he said.

"This effort displays a remarkable solidarity in the church. It marks a turning point (for the church) in the issues it tackles," he said.

Marchese agreed that the letter is the most challenging statement thus far by any national or regional conference of bishops and noted that it is not a criticism pointed at the Reagan administration's military policies. But he agreed that it has set the tone of a growing distrust of nuclear war strategy.

The letter is the result of a filtering down process that began with the appointment of Bishop Jadot and the forth with appointments of delegates that were pastoral in nature who believe in taking a more active role in this moral issue, he said.

The letter is the result of a careful open process with very different persons and elements involved, including administration officials, scientists, members of the military, and congressional representatives, marchese said. When drafts of this letter were circulated, both sides, pro and con, were free to express their opinions.

"The consensus really is a consensus," Marchese said. "We must have a long vision of the world. The personal security of one's world should be secondary," he said.

Aid notices set for June mailing

By CHRIS FERRETTI
Collegian Staff

Beginning Monday, financial aid notifications will be sent to all students who have filled out a Financial Aid Form, according to the director of financial aid at the University of Massachusetts.

These notifications will be sent in one of two mailings which will continue until the beginning of June, said Arthur Jackson.

"Financial aid offers, non-offers and late notifications will be sent first to students classed as dependents," he said.

"This mailing will be our largest and will be sent to all upperclassmen to their dorm or local address," he said.

"The second mailing, which will take place in two to three weeks, will be sent to students classed as independents and graduate students to their permanent address," Jackson said. "These mailings will enable students unable to receive financial aid the opportunity to arrange some type of summer employment."

The financial aid office makes every attempt to fund everyone, he said, but that is not possible. In January, the office was only able to meet 34 percent of total student need, meaning 66 percent of the applicants received no aid. The office's policy is to grant aid to students that demonstrate the highest need until the money runs out, Jackson said.

"It is a difficult situation for students that receive no aid. One alternative is to secure a Guaranteed Student Loan (HELP Loan). Applications for these loans are now available. June 30 is the preliminary deadline to insure that the loan will be credited to the student's bill," he said.

Ninety-five percent of UMass' financial aid is funded from federal and state sources. But on the positive side, the federal government has not cut back on aid this year and the Massachusetts State Scholarship Program sponsored by the Board of Regents has raised its average award from $300 to $500, Jackson said.

The University has set the first week in August as the tuition payment deadline. All financial aid awards, scholarship awards and loans will be credited to student's bills. College work-study is the only program that is not credited to the bill, he said.

UMass employee forms group for women on campus

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts employee is organizing a campus based committee to address the issues of daycare, maternity leave and career ladder training.

Linda Fitz, organizer of the committee and the recording secretary of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) at UMass, said possible discriminatory hiring practice is another issue the support group will address.

Fitz said she is starting the committee because there is not enough support for women on campus.

"I am going to have a meeting gathering next month, an open forum, just to see how many women show up. If the women at the meeting want to do something, we will set up a labor management meeting," she said.

The administration is doing nothing to promote women into jobs, Fitz claimed. The University personnel office sends women to food services and the men to the physical plant, where the jobs are higher paying, she said.

Margot Roche, employment office supervisor at UMass said, "All applicants are treated equally according to what they are seeking. They fill out an application and skills inventory and clerical testing is given only if the applicant is applying for that type of position."

Fitz said career ladder training programs for employees were established in the last contract three years ago and nothing has been done.

"It takes a long time to get any agency of the bureaucracy to move," said Scott Overing, director of labor relations at UMass. Overing said he has no idea how long it will be before the training programs are implemented.

"It has been approved by the president's office. We are waiting for funding," he said.

The career ladder training programs are designed to train people already working at the University so they can become more qualified and be promoted, Overing said.

The programs will help plumbers, electricians and carpenters get licensed, but there will not be any introductory level courses to help an employee change from secretarial to a trade position.

The career ladder training program is designed to create a career ladder rather than to help employees to branch out into other areas, said Kenneth Dietrich, business agent and staff representative for AFSCME.

There are few women in upper level positions, therefore career ladder training will only help women get into upper level jobs if they offer introduct ..ry level training, said Peter Wozniak, superintendant of the Physical Plant.

Although there is day care available at UMass, Fitz said it is too expensive for many women to afford. Fitz doesn't expect the union to fund daycare because dues would go up. Instead she will try to get assistance from the University as a side benefit.

"If they want more fringe benefits instead of more pay, the University is willing to accept that," said Overing. "In collective bargaining, some guy with no kids won't trade a pay raise for better benefits."

Fitz said she wants the new contract to guarantee a woman that she will work in the same place when she returns from maternity leave. Overing said she does not believe this is possible because the University needs "flexibility."

Man crosses Massachusetts to help halt abuse of children

Mike Hannahan, in the middle of a 550 mile hike across Massachusetts, comes into Amherst...

Although somewhat weary, Michael Hannahan's spirits were high as he walked through Amherst Tuesday on his 550 mile walk through Massachusetts to promote the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (MSPCC).

Hannahan has walked 280 miles since April 26, when he left the State House in Boston. He plans to reach Faneuil Hall at 1 p.m. on May 22 where "Mike's Hike" will end.

Hannahan worked for MSPCC for the 1981-1982 academic year in an internship program in partial fulfillment of the degree of Master's of Public Administration at the University of Massachusetts. Hannahan said Tuesday he thought of doing the hike as a way to promote the 105-year old MSPCC.

"I got tired of protests and wanted to do something. If I get two or three people interested in the MSPCC in an area (because of the hike), the hike will be successful," he said.

Hannahan said the best feature of the MSPCC is its direct help network.

"People get help directly — they don't have to go through a middleman," he said of the MSPCC, which has a network of professionals who work with abused children and their families.

Many members of the MSPCC consider Hannahan an inspiration.

"Something like this, especially by a guy like this, is great because he's dedicated," siad George Feiker, director of the Hampshire County board of the MSPCC.

The focus of the MSPCC is to prevent and protect children from physical and emotional neglect and abuse, with an attempt to keep the family intact. Less than ten percent of the families referred to the agency by teachers, counselors, neighbors or the parents themselves end up with the child being removed from the family, said Jack Smey, district executive of the MSPCC.

The organization is unique in that it is the only statewide private, non-profit protective service agency in the country. This allows it to help families in preventing abuse before it happens because it is free of the bureaucratic difficulties experienced by public agencies which require proof of abuse before any action can be taken to resolve the problem.

The organization has local offices in Northampton and Holyoke which accept referral calls 24 hours a day. The numbers are 584-1875 in Northampton and 532-9446 in Holyoke.

Birds are newest residents in dorm

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

Two residents of Southwest Residential College are feeling a bit closer to nature these days ever since a pair of birds decided to build a nest on their window sill and intrude upon their privacy.

Peter Greenblatt said he noticed two tiny brown and grey sparrows dropping piles of twigs and bits of paper last Wednesday on the hinge between the half opened window and the screen of his room in 409 Kennedy Dormitory.

At first, Greenblatt said he was quite interested with the birds and their little nest which developed after four days of construction.

But now he says he and his roommate are a little perturbed about the situation since they are unable to close their window and the birds wake them up every morning when they fly in about sunrise and begin flapping their wings and chirping tunes.

"In the beginning, I wanted to see them, it was interesting to see the progress of the nest but now with the cooler weather and the fact that we are always woken up at 6 a.m. it is getting to be annoying," Greenblatt said.

This Tuesday, however, after another early rise, the residents found a little white egg the size of a jelly bean sitting in the nest and this could change things.

"I want to get rid of the nest but now I feel bad with the little egg there," he said.

Greenblatt said that save early morning, the birds are gone all day, only returning occasionally to add layers to the nest or check the egg.

"They are scared of humans. When they are here, as soon as they see someone looking at them, they fly away," Greenblatt said.

"Why would they come to Southwest, why not a tree or Northeast Residential Area," he said.

Campus based groups strive to make students aware of alcohol problems

By PAULA HOYT

Party planning is one topic of the workshops which suggests they want to make activities other than drinking the focus of parties. Bean said workshops give RAs and CRAs party planning hints and resource information. Peer educators from the program have given more than 60 workshops this year, Bean said.

Another alcohol education program, the Student Opportunity Program (STOP), began this semester for students who want to change their drinking habits or are worried that they might have a problem. Carlen Riccelli, coordinator of the alcohol educator program, said 12 students enrolled this semester.

"We were just piloting the program. There seems to be an interest so we're continuing it in the fall," Riccelli said.

She said another new program was a presentation this fall with area police and bar owners addressing various alcohol issues.

"Over 120 bartenders and bar owners participated and were told how to recognize the stages of intoxication, how to shut off drinkers, and how to prevent law suits against their establishments," Riccelli said.

She said they also learned about the latest drunken driving laws, the Speed and Alcohol Patrol (SAP), and the bars' rights and responsibilities.

Riccelli also directs the alcohol task force which was formed by University staff and students and deals with policy setting and administrative problems concerning alcohol. The educator program serves also as a referral service for other local alcohol programs such as mental health and alcoholics anonymous, Riccelli said.

Al-Anon has meetings twice a week on campus as well as a 24-hour hotline, she said.

For concerned students looking for help off campus, the Hampshire Problem Drinking Program in Northampton provides individual, couple, and group therapy.

"We have offered service to several students and I think we do well with them," said Lauren Kaplan from the program.

All the area alcohol services are available for people who may be in a relationship with a problem drinker and need help discussing or bringing up the issue, Bean said.

A breathalyzer display will be outside the Bluewall during happy hour again tomorrow as part of an effort by University of Massachusetts Health Services to show the effects of drinking.

The display has been set up about twice a month all year to educate students about alcohol. The breathalyzer is used to measure the blood alcohol concentration of volunteers, said Warren Bean, teaching assistant for the alcohol educator program at health services.

The demonstration is prepared by Students Teaching Alcohol Responsibility (STARS), a group of undergraduates who receive credit by training, doing research, and educating peers about alcohol use and abuse.

The breathalyzer demonstration is just one of many alcohol education and research programs now being conducted at the University.

The STARS program's staff members said their most successful effort in reaching students is with workshops around campus. Media presentations, bartender training, and lectures in classes are also done by educators.

Bean said about 30 to 40 students stop by the table each time and about 10 to 15 go through the test.

"I think a lot find out they get drunk faster than they thought," he said. "The test hits home and lets them know that judgment is the first thing to go when drinking."

ROTC volunteers form new era of patriots

Editor's note: Collegian reporter Mary Cresse trained among members of the University of Massachusetts Army Reserve Officers Training Corps battalion in a typical training weekend last month. Following is a first-person account of her experiences.

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

The correspondent was late. I was always late. Either I was adjusting my uniform or tying my boot laces or unable to readily find my position in line in the fourth squad, first platoon of Company A in the University of Massachusetts Reserve Officer Training Corps battalion.

"Doin' okay?" Swanson whispered as I pressed my weapon to my side and stood at attention.

I nodded, I was, for the weekend, an Army cadet in training for Advanced Summer Training Camp. This weekend was the last for my fellow cadets to hone their military skills before heading down to North Carolina for the 8-week intensive training session. It was 5:40 a.m.

"Sling arms!" came the command, I picked up my rifle and slung it on my right shoulder.

"Riiiight face!" I turned on my heel.

"Forward maaach! Ya left, ya left ya left right left, ya left, ya left, ya left right left!" Barresi scanned his troops.

"Double time it!"

To the rhythm of the march and the echoes of his platoon, Barresi began to chant:

Two old ladies lyin' in bed
One rolled over to the other and said
I wanna be an air-borne Ranger
I wanna live a life of danger...

"Dress it up!" he screamed. Everyone measured the distance between himself and the cadet to his right — arm's length.

"Column left!" We rounded the corner and started running around the half-mile perimeter of the barracks area, only to circle it again. Barresi seemed to like it. He was to command for the remainder of the morning until another cadet would have his turn at earning experience in preparation for further leadership training this summer at Fort Bragg, N.C.

"Platoon halt!"

Thank God.

We reached the field that morning at 8:45. Saturday was tactical training and military skills day, meaning everyone would learn how to camoflage themselves properly and work in the woods, setting up combat positions and ambushing the enemy.

Each platoon divided into teams that would organize modes of attack in simulated combat situations. Causeway and Chapman led my team through our mission: to locate the enemy thought to be a little more than 600 yards away and capture the hill. We had 20 minutes.

"What they wanna do is called 'bounding,'" senior advisor Monohon whispered as my squad discussed strategy. "They want to leapfrog from one position to another so they'll have people to back them up if the enemy attacks the first line of soldiers."

The woods were dense. We had to figure out a way to see each other, yet still evade the enemy. Causeway decided to take the front position in the first line and wave at a designated time.

Causeway led the first group, Chapman the second. I followed both as they scaled a hill and dropped into the woods behind bushes and trees, hiding in the 70 degree shade.

"Move it up!" Chapman whispered loudly. After 15 minutes and 500 yards, they spotted the enemy stationed behind a clump of dead, fallen trees,.

Causeway sent the signal to Causeway who motioned to Gray who motioned to Davidson who moved up the hill and signaled to Causeway again, who yelled, "FIIIIIRE!"

They hugged the ground and aimed at the clump of bushes where cadets Jackson and Ross were waiting with a pneumatic machine gun that simulated the sounds of a real weapon.

Ross counted the number of squad members. Eight.

"Eight of you would've been dead in less than ten minutes," he said.

"Your main mistake was to come up all at once when Causeway yelled to fire," Monohon noted. "You should've waited more and had one guy try to come up from the side."

Exercises like this were to be completed eight more times before lunch. I took a break.

Every cadet who enters ROTC has to at some point pass Military Skills — learn to fire an M-16, use a gas mask, fend off an approaching enemy soldier, organize duties for the people he commands. If a cadet doesn't pass "MilSkills," he has trouble staying a cadet.

I sprawled on my stomach and Sanderlin hoisted the butt of the M-60 machine gun on my right shoulder. Each cadet must learn to fire an M-60, the Army's regulation machine gun; whole battalions of the Army's infantry often use it as their standard walking weapon.

"All you gotta do is match up the rear sight box with the front sight box and aim at Ivan over there." Ivan was the official target, marked with a red star and positioned a convenient 40 yards away. "Do it."

I felt a little strange lying there gripping the most powerful weapon a soldier could carry. It looked almost like a toy gun, incapable of blowing holes in anything but cardboard.

I aimed at Ivan. Not a second after I pulled the trigger, a stream of orange flashes spit through the barrel, and I shook with the kick of the gun.

"Stop it, you'll melt the barrel!" Sanderlin shouted after a few moments. "Let go!"

The gun didn't stop firing or shaking until a moment later. Sanderlin informed me I would've split a real Ivan in half.

"'Ruined his day', as they say," he said. "What did you think?"

Pretty realistic. Sickeningly realistic. "Pretty good but sick, Sanderlin."

"It is, man, but you can't think of it that way if you're in combat. You can't stop doin' it 'cause of that."

"I'd rather not do it at all, except if I aim at targets. That was okay."

Sanderlin shrugged. He had a matter-of-fact attitude about the whole thing. While I couldn't picture him as being anything other than serious near an M-60, he didn't have the attitude of "kill those Commies, man."

I wondered how I'd fare in real combat. If Ivan had been real in any way, I think I'd freeze.

ROTC knocked

The majority of the 1969 Yale student body thought ROTC actively discriminated against homosexuals and women, so they threw it off campus.

At Harvard, ROTC was an immediate casualty of the bitter militaristic and ideological battles waged there during the upheavals of the late 1960s.

ROTC cadets at Boston University and Northeastern were spit at, chastised, and beaten by classmates.

And at UMass, shouts of "baby-killer" and "Fascist" peppered the air as military-hating students occupied the Military Science Building in June of 1970.

On April 20, 1972, draft-resisters occupied Dickinson Hall. ROTC classes were cancelled to avoid violence.

Peer opposition was accompanied by the Trustees and faculty, who terminated the existing ROTC curriculum in 1970, replacing it with more "academic" courses taught by civilian professors.

Anti-Vietnam sentiment was still undoubtedly the prime cause for the near elimination of UMass ROTC — membership reached an all-time low of 67 in September 1971 — the Mai Lai horror was then all too clear.

Anti-ROTC sentiment has leveled off since then, while the population of ROTC has increased. Current enrollment is more than triple the 1971 figure. Students are now less adamant in their opposition, though it still exists.

Michael Leary of the Radical Student Union seemed to sum it up. "I happen to hate the military and ROTC, but if that's their choice, that's their business, as stupid as it might be."

Tape confirms Oswald's guilt

By DAVE LINTON
Collegian Staff

Based on an acoustical analysis of a tape recording of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, a Mount Holyoke College professor yesterday told about 50 students and professors at the University of Massachusetts that there was no evidence of a second gunman whom many theorists claim was located in a grassy knoll along the motorcade route.

Norman F. Ramsey, a professor of cosmology, served as chairman of a national research council committee that concluded the sounds recorded by the Dallas Police Department attributed to gunshots were actually recorded one minute after Kennedy was shot.

The committee's conclusions contradict the findings of two other research groups who conducted studies for the House Select Committee on Assassinations. On the basis of those findings, the House Select Committee concluded there was "a high probability" two gunmen were involved in the assassination.

Town Meeting review on WMUA

Tonight at 6, WMUA (University of Massachusetts radio, 91.1 FM) will air a preview of actions to be taken on remaining warrant articles pending before Annual Town Meeting, and, in a later segment, broadcast an interview with members of Northampton's gay community.

The 60-minute program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced by Vickie Bates and hosted by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Mosakowski's interview with members of the gay community will focus on the dissolution of Mayor Musante's task force on gay and lesbian issues as well as the gay rights march and rally planned for Saturday.

Ramsey played a cassette of the assassination tape to the audience and lowered his arm to point out the portion of the tape containing the sounds which were supposed to be gunshots. Ramsey said the original recording was made from the transmission of a microphone on a police/motorcycle which was stuck on open at the time of the assassination.

Ramsey said the Dallas police transmissions were made on two separate channels. One channel recorded the normal Dallas police operations and a separate channel for the Kennedy motorcade. Ramsey said somehow the recording of the assassination was recorded on the channel for normal police operations.

He said the committee made impulse printouts of the echoes of the "gunshots" recorded on channel one and failed to find any absolute similarities with the impulse patterns on the motorcade channel.

Ramsey said his committee also found inaccuracies in the studies which were conducted for the House Select Committee on Assassinations. He also said his committee recommended the future use of tape recordings when guarding presidents to prevent fraudulent recordings and to satisfy the public.

"It is important to find out what happened if it (an assassination) happened anyway," he said.

Models make charity into fashionable event

By DAVID B. MINER
Collegian Staff

A benefit fashion show held Monday night by the University of Massachusetts retail sales promotion department netted at least $500 for the Hampshire County Unit of the American Cancer Society.

A standing room only crowd at Hangar One in Hadley watched as 17 models presented two hours of the latest in spring and summer fashions.

The show, "Fashions of the Time", was a semester project of Shari Marcus, a teaching assistant. It drew praise from both Dr. Jacquelene Robeck, coordinator of the UMass fashion marketing department, and the general manager of Hangar One.

"I am extremely proud of these students. They put the entire show together with minimal help and guidance from the faculty. They took an idea and ran with it," Robeck said, referring to the 30 students who assisted Marcus in putting the show together.

Planning for the show started in the second week of the semester and involved more hours than coordinators said they calculate, but, as backstage coordinator Cheryl Huie said after the show, "The reward is in the end, knowing that you have put on a good show."

The fashions were supplied by nine local retailers while other local merchants supplied flowers and vases for each table. A professional hair stylist donated his services as well.

Simple majority elects OHAG runoff winner

Maura McHugh defeated Philip Vettraino for the vice presidency of the Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) in a run off election held Monday and Tuesday.

McHugh received 281 votes, while Vettraino polled 181, according to Micheal Altheu, OHAG co-president.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Ed King? It's no joke

When someone first told me that Ed King was getting an honorary degree from UMass, I thought it was a joke. I really did.

I mean, a more inappropriate candidate for such an award would be very difficult to find. Okay, so I understand that it's a tradition here at the University to award former governors honorary degrees. I'm not taking issue with that.

But the irony of Ed King being so honored, and by UMass of all places, is so glaring that it just begs an immediate and critical response.

Ed King? An honorary degree from UMass? Come on, you've got to be kidding.

Ed King, the right-wing conservative whom the Boston Globe termed "the weakest governor in recent history," being awarded an honorary degree from UMass, one of the most progressive and vital educational institutions in the country?

The irony doesn't end there. King, in his four years as governor, presided over a steady decline in this state's support of higher education. Tuition increases and budget cuts were a regular part of his public higher education program. UMass, as we all know, is the largest school in the state system. UMass awarding this man a degree is not only ironic, it's downright outrageous.

During his term as governor, Edward J. King never once made a public appearance here at UMass. Any guesses as to why not? Because he was so unpopular, particularly among people associated with higher education. His presence here would have provoked demonstrations and subsequent negative publicity.

But now, as a private citizen, presumably Ed King feels assured that his presence here will not provoke the kind of disapproval that it would have when he was governor.

Guess again, Ed.

Although he is no longer governor, most people at UMass don't have such a short memory span that we can't recall the "accomplishments" of his administration. And just in case critics charge that all UMass students dislike about King is the fact that he raised the legal drinking age, a brief list follows of some of the things Ed King did or stood for while in office that a majority of UMass students, past and present, most probably disagreed with or were adversely affected by.

Among many other things, King:

•vetoed a bill to divest Mass. state pension funds from companies doing business in South Africa. (he was overridden)...

•vetoed the Bottle Bill twice (he was overridden the second time)

•successfully pushed for one of the most restrictive anti-abortion (choice) laws in the country, the "Informed Consent Law," which requires girls under the age of 18 to have parental permission or court authorization to have an abortion...

•claimed his greatest contribution to the "pro-life" movement was his appointment of "pro-life" judges to the state judiciary...

•supported opening up George's Bank, an internationally famous fishing ground, for oil exploration...

•sponsored legislation outlawing most forms of drug paraphernalia...

•fired the Commission on the Status of Women after their findings didn't agree with his conservative ideology...

•as a lame duck governor last fall, appointed hundreds of his friends and political supporters, often without proper credentials, to state jobs...

•had a reputation for ignoring the extensive corruption in his administration...

You get the picture. Ed King's administration was an embarrassment to anyone who is proud of living in Massachusetts, especially to people who take pride in our state's supposed liberalism and the fact that we were the only state not to vote for Nixon in 1972.

Maybe the trustees who recommended the award were put in a sensitive and difficult position where breaking tradition and not giving King the honor would have been politically damaging in some way. I don't know.

What I do know is that the vast majority of UMass students and alumni are in strong disagreement with Ed King being awarded an honorary degree from this university. Student leaders, in fact, are planning a mass student action at graduation to peacefully and intelligently express the widespread disapproval of Ed King being honored here.

This is not an issue of free speech. No one wants to stop Ed King from speaking. It will be a silent and symbolic protest against the honoring of a man whose administration's record is antithetical to the very goals of progress and public higher education.

Ed King turned his back on us for four years. It is only appropriate that we should do the same.

And if anyone questions whether Ed King deserves such embarrassing treatment, just remind them that King was, after all, Ronald Reagan's favorite Democratic governor.

See you at Commencement.

Solidarity — working for the people

Brooke States

In Warsaw there is a piece of graffiti scrawled on the walls of housing projects, factories, and neighborhoods. It is a P on top of a W, in Polish it stands for Polska Walczaca (Poland is still fighting.) It was the motto of the Polish Home Army when they went to the barricades against the Nazis in 1944.

For seventeen months Poland has still been fighting against the "state of war" that was declared against Solidarnosc and the Polish people by the state and general Jaruzelski. May 1st was International Workers Day. All over the world workers and unions celebrate this day. In Poland, a supposed "workers state," the government was using water cannons and tear gas against thousands of its own workers, who wished to celebrate Mayday in their own way. Despite the best efforts of the government resistance continues to percolate. The official acronym of The Military Council of National Salvation, Poland's governing body is officially known as WRONA. The Polish word for CROW is WRONA, a fact which has engendered a rich crop of graffiti.

The birth of Solidarnosc in August of 1980 was an act with precedence going back to the 1950s, when workers were shot down in Pozan. Throughout the 60s and 70s there were strikes and demonstrations by workers, peasants, and intellectuals. In September of 1976 the Committee for the Defense of Workers (KOR) was formed, helping bring workers and intellectuals together. In 1980 all the elements came together and forced the regime to accept that without precedence in eastern europe, a free trade union. Solidarnosc went from nothing to ten million members in 16 months, including many members of the Communist Party, and forty thousand organizers and officials.

The West greeted the emergence, life, and supposed death of Solidarnosc with mixed reviews. Media in the United States discovered that class struggle exists. They just had to go half way around the world to a "Workers state" to find it, ignoring the reality of it in their own country. In the state house in Boston there is an attractive photographic display of the history of workers struggles in Poland. One wonders if at some point they might put a display there showing the history of the martyred Sacco and Vanzetti, victims of what Solidarnosc fought against. The Economist noted that "Marx's irresistible force, the Working class, has collided with Lenins immovable object, the Communist Party."

In some cases the actions of state leaders were absurd. President Reagan declared that Poland will always be Poland. El Salvador will probably just be a clone of the United States. Puerto Rico just a state rather than a country. Reagan was busy lighting candles for the Polish workers, while sacking his government of 12,000 air traffic controllers and their union. Pierre Trudeau of Canada weighed in with; "Better to have Polish Generals and soldiers maintaining order rather than have the Soviets doing it. Since he has had practice invoking martial law he should know what he is talking about.

As Poland owes Western banks some 25 billion dollars in loans, this probably has something to do with the response. Many of the demands that Solidarnosc as fighting for would have further crippled Poland's ability to pay that money back. As it is they are put in the unenviable position of many third world countries, having to borrow to pay the interest, forgetting the principles.

Solidarity was not just a trade union. It was and is the expression of a society that is struggling against a government enforced from above. The Polish United Workers Party (Poland's Communist Party) did not grow out of popular struggle or have a mass base. It was more or less set up by the Russians at the end of World War II. In a poll done of which groups the Polish people held in respect the line up was: Solidarity first, Church second, Army a surprising third, and PUWP thirteen.

The program and ideological thrust of Solidarnosc was not just around wage issues. They fought for workers control of the workplace, as opposed to both state control and a return to capitalism. Workers continually referred to their bosses as the "Red Bourgeoise" Solidarity helped start and push forward plans for workers cooperatives, elections of management, and various other forms of running an economy that are, and would not be tolerated in a capitalist country.

While the states armed forces have ended the experiment in Poland temporarily, they cannot stop it in the long run. One of the many slogans that appeared on the buildings in Poland was "The snows of Winter will start melting to their horror and the first shots of Spring will blossom to our delight."

Will we work to change the world?

Randolph T. Holhut

This is supposed to be a season of hope. Myself and the rest of the Class of 1983 will be gathering at the stadium May 28th to mark the end of our long, arduous, and expensive journey towards a degree. We will walk out of the stadium with our heads held high, and with our diploma covers in hand...we will walk confidently and resolutely into the abyss.

We are walking into a bleak world, a world where one would be hard pressed to find a silver lining under the dark clouds that surround us. Our future is very much in doubt, with double-digit unemployment, the spectre of nuclear annihilation, and an increasingly inevitable long and bloody war in Central America. We have people in our government that are insensitive to the needs of the people and a corrupt economy that rapes the people for it's profits. Our environment is fast deteriorating and our people are starving. This is the world that we are confidently and resolutely walking out into.

I could keep this litany of despair going, but it wouldn't amount to anything. We know the troubled world we are heading out into, and we know that there isn't much hope. But it is our duty and obligation, as the best and the brightest of this generation, to turn that litany of despair into a litany of hope...for ourselves and our children. The social activism that the people studied on this campus in years past is non-existent today. The first concern is for ourselves, the hell with everyone else. We have ignored the collapse of the world around us, and if we continue to do so, we have no one to blame but ourselves when the end comes.

The fires of social change must be rekindled, and it is up to us to do it. We must work to bring social and economic justice to all peoples of the world. We must work to bring a halt to the insane arms buildup that threatens our very existence. We must work to protect our environment, so ours and future generations can reap the benefits. We must work to make this world a better place than when we entered it. It is our duty and our obligation and we cannot do anything less. It won't be easy...it is far easier to speak of change than to carry it out. But we must dedicate our lives, to the best of our abilities, to accomplish this awesome task.

The challenge I make to you is not a new one, it is a challenge that has been made time and time again to the people of each new generation, like the challenge John F.

"But it is our duty and obligation, as the best and brightest...to turn that litany of despair into a litany of hope."

Kennedy made to Americans about the same time most of us who are graduating were born, "Ask not what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country."

As we head out of the University and into whatever we hope to be doing for the rest of our lives, we would do well to remember those words. Though things look hopeless and out of control, things can and will get better, for we still have the power to change the world, we have only forgotten how to use it. This is my last column for the Collegian as a student, to all the friends and colleagues I've worked with over the past two years, goodbye and good luck.

King column arrogantly elitist

To the Editor:

May 10th's column that discussed whether or not UMass should present former governor Edward King with an honorary degree, ('Ed King gets the last laugh'), criticized "the isolated administrators in that Ivory Tower called Whitmore."

How can the author call the administrators isolated and unresponsive to student needs when the columnist cannot spell the name of the chancellor? (the correct spelling is Duffey, not Duffy).

Regardless of King's merits as a governor, the author entirely misses the point. While King may not have helped the University of Massachusetts, he was elected to the state's highest constitutional office by the citizens of the Commonwealth. It is appropriate that he will be honored as a former governor at the commencement—in accordance with tradition.

The columnist said he is "disgusted but not surprised" with the administration. I feel the same way toward the author. I am disgusted by his uninformed arrogance and elitism. However I am not surprised: I have read John Hudson's columns for the past two semesters.

Turn your back on King Day

To the Editor:

To fellow students, faculty members, parents and friends of the University,

This year the Trustees of this University have chosen to ignore the prevailing attitude on this campus that former Governor Edward J. King is not a friend of this University. They have done so by offering an honorary degree, and the opportunity to participate in this year's graduation ceremony.

This past fall a message was sent to Beacon Hill in the form of a near unanimous rejection of then Gov. King's re-election plea.

To ask this year's Seniors to boycott their graduation ceremony is a drastic course of action to propose, I would however ask that students who will be attending and feel slighted, to follow an ORGANIZED FORM OF PROTEST.

I urge all seniors, faculty, parents, and friends TO STAND AND FACE AWAY FROM THE SPEAKER'S PODIUM DURING THE PRESENTATION OF THE FORMER GOVERNOR'S DEGREE, AND REMAIN THAT WAY DURING ANY SPEECH HE MAY MAKE. I further urge that no student or spectator heckle or harass in any other way, UNITY IS IMPORTANT!

Let Edward King speak and let his words fall on deaf ears, just as our words, pleas and cries for help and improved education fell on deaf ears during his administration. Let us hope that we send a clear message to those who make decisions such as these that we won't endure such slaps in the face again.

Have a GOOD GRADUATION!

Bury the anti-King hatchet

To the Editor:

It's not surprising to see John Hudson reacting so harshly about the choice of former Governor Edward J. King as an honorary degree recipient this spring. Hudson has never disguised his dislike for our former governor. If not entirely accurate, at least he's consistent.

Hudson's criticism of King's treatment of UMass-Amherst deserves a response, regardless of how distasteful I find this exercise. Usually I find it more convenient to ignore a "hatchet job", and as a journalist I realize we all fall prey to such temptations of lashing out at those people and officials we dislike. But there are bounds to our prejudices and dislikes. A balanced appraisal is one of those bounds.

How big a role did King play in the "decay of higher education here at UMass" compared to Mike Dukakis in his first term? Consider the following. During Dukakis' first administration, UMass-Amherst received level funding for four straight years when inflation was continuously rising.

This too, is decay — but Hudson overlooks this basic fact. Many department heads and administrators here can remember the good old days of Dukakis' first administration with dismay. To his credit, Dukakis has admitted his previous shortcomings insofar as UMass-Amherst was concerned. During his last campaign he tried very hard to convince educators that he wouldn't return to his parsimonious ways. So far, it appears as if he's going to keep his word.

On the other hand, (and even Hudson is aware of this) King increased UMass' funding by 12 percent during his last year. Alright, it was an election year — and undoubtably politics played a part. But in 1978, Dukakis failed to see the wisdom of such prudent politics.

I agree with Hudson regarding King's lack of presence on our campus. As his former Issues Coordinator for this area, it was not easy to explain missed appointments, etc. To this, I pin most of the blame on his scheduling office in Boston. Deep down, I believe Gov. King would've loved to correct whatever misconceptions others had of him and his administration. He would have loved to put aside any doubts which a few professors (possessing very short memories) had about him.

The election of 1982 is over, and let's bury all hatchets once and for all. In this all-too cynical world and state in particular which we live; the tendency to keep beating upon our adversaries is too prevalent. Politics is not improved by continued cynicism and nit-picking. Politics, like history is something to move on to better things tomorrow; and while not forgetting the lessons of the past — it is also a call for the improvement of our condition and future without needless harping of the past.

Steven P. Barrett

Gov. King's reelection campaign, 1982

No open arms for Gov. King

To the Editor:

I want to congratulate you on a most emotive editorial on this University awarding an honorary degree to our former governor. You brought out all the arguments I could think of and more with which one could argue against such an action by the University. Bravo!!!

I can understand the necessity of an "open arms" policy toward those seeking education at the doors of our institution of higher education. But, how can anyone hold open their arms to a man who tried to take those doors off their hinges?

The best method for graduating seniors to demonstrate their displeasure with our administration awarding an honorary degree to Mr. King is not to boo him or to heckle him but, to stand when he rises to receive his degree and turn our backs on the man, in much the same fashion he turned his back on UMass.

Edward L. Birk

Nangle review is sarcastic

To the Editor:

The abundance of cynicism inherent in each and every one of Rich Nangle's articles continues to annoy and disgust those who read the Arts page of the Collegian.

Your statements in the review of U2 which focused upon the Union Program Council are not only unfair and opinionated (as usual) but more importantly seek to cultivate a negative attitude towards the continued efforts of U.P.C. As a music columnist and avid concert goer, I would think that you would be better informed about the difficult and often frustrating process of securing an artist for an engagement. Unfortunately, I am wrong.

Instead of searching out answers to unfounded rumors, by going directly to a reliable source of information, you are satisfied to assume that U.P.C. is unwilling and "unable" to meet the needs of the student body. I would hardly call this responsible and thorough journalism. If you are not satisfied, I suggest you take a bit of your own advice and crawl off into a corner and DIE!!

UPC — doing what it can

To the Editor:

Throughout the years, The Union Program Council, (UPC) has been the subject of much criticism. Like any organization though, constructive criticism is positive and expected. I feel strongly that throughout the year UPC has worked hard to bring a variety of music to campus. It must be understood that there are close to 20,000 undergraduate students on this campus with diverse tastes and interests in music. It would be virtually impossible to meet the needs of all of these individuals within the span of the academic year. A few of the concerts we have done include: Santana, Joe Jackson, Phil Collins, The Ramones, Jimmy Cliff/Peter Tosh, The English Beat, and Evelyn King.

It is frustrating when I read comments such as, "once again UPC proved itself 'unable' to meet the needs of the students." From the few examples listed above, I think we have met the needs of many students. This quote appeared in the Monday, May 9th edition of the Collegian. The author, Richard Nangle, did not bother to take the time to ask us why the band U2 is not coming to the Mystery Series. It is not as easy as picking up the phone. In order to book a band one needs finances to do the show. Whe we finally did get the funding, the dates had been taken throughout the State. I am not making this up, this is reality! The next time you make accusations, make sure you have the right information.

Another thing I would like to make clear to the student body are the costs of some bands, and why everyone's favorite band does not come to UMass. For example, the Police cost close to $250,000 for one show. That is more than our entire stadium show budget was for 1983. Journey costs $250,000 plus another $50,000 for their sound and lights. David Bowie costs anywhere from $300,000 - $800,000. Bands such as Bruce Springsteen and Queen do not play at colleges and if they do, they have an outside promoter do it.

I would also like to mention the fact that when some bands are available we do not have a concert hall to put them in, or there are holidays, and long weekends to deal with. There is quite a bit of other programming going on at this campus, and we cannot have all the halls on campus whenever we want them.

I am not making excuses, but letting people know that there are real world problems to deal with in the music industry.

If there are concerns with bands, costs, etc., come up and let us know, it is your money! We are not the unapproachable ogers that some people believe us to be. We are students like yourselves; let's work together.

Thank you.

University of Massachusetts at Amherst

Instruction for Participants

All Candidates
There will be no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 28, 1983. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college.

Who is Eligible to Participate?

Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1983. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master's degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 29, 1983 to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 29, 1983. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTHWEST end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities/Information Center and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early to ensure good seating. Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each undergraduate/graduate student will receive a packet of six formal invitations. Students are urged to encourage their guests to arrive early for good seating.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods

Undergraduate Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Master's Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., upon presentation of an I.D. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each Ph.D. candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the university will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A251 Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $26. (Five College Doctoral Hood: will be available at $42.95.)

Rentals for Faculty
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their rental orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS WEDNESDAY, MAY 18. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds if apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Szelewicki at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for Friday before Commencement. A limited number of rooms in University housing will be available for relatives and other guests the nights of May 27 and 28. Please contact the University Summer Conference Office, 918 Campus Center, 545-3400, by May 10. Fees: $15 single/$21 double, per night. There is a $5 cash key deposit — to be returned when the key is returned.

The semester is fast ending and even as we close our books for the last time, the sounds of summer are beginning to appear in full force. On a relatively local level, NRBQ's new release on Bearsville Records is big summer news. The BQ's play rock 'n roll music suitable for all times of the year, but the summer is when their LP's hit my turntable a lot. Suffice to say, I'm glad I've a new one to give the others a break. Other spring/summer sounds include new B-52's and an upcoming Talking Heads album (will those guys release the wax already: I'm dying to hear it). This weekend the big event is the Pond Series. Without naming any acts, I'm at liberty to say the line-up this year is much better overall than last year. There are some perennial favorites lined up, and some acts you may not have heard before, but they will definitely impress you.

If all the free daytime music you can tolerate is not enough for you, there are some club dates you might wish to take note of. Tonight it's the Stompers back again on their semi-monthly tour of Western Mass. They'll be tearing the roof right off the Hangar One. Also tonight is the UMass Student Composer's concert at Bezanson Recital Hall. Several debut performances of original student compositions will be featured. Admission is free.

Tomorrow is White Noise at Sheehan's and First Rate at the Wok. On campus are two different free concerts. At the Bluewall is the group, Band Of . . ., a fusion collective with blues influence, and the Electronic Music Extravaganza at Bezanson Recital Hall. Saturday includes some fine vocal jazz at The Avenue with the Lynne Meryl Quartet. Also appearing Saturday night are Vast Ed Vadas' Fab Heavyweights at Sheehan's Cafe, and First Rate at the Wok.

Not a particularly jam packed weekend, but considering the music available, there's tunes aplenty for all.

Upcoming area concerts include Stan Rogers this Sunday at the Academy of Music, Chubby Checker with the Persuasions next weekend and Waylon Jennings at the Springfield Civic Center on June 12.

Band of..., the fusion collective. Will play free of charge tomorrow night at the Blue Wall.

It's a mystery (series) to me

By CHRIS FERRETTI
Collegian Staff

The UPC Mystery Series is no longer a mystery.

The two day event will feature Melba Moore, Gary US Bonds, Nona Hendryx, Edgar Winter and an encore performance of Hair by the UMass Music Theater Guild.

Performances will begin promptly at noon on Saturday and 11:00 on Sunday by the campus pond near the Fine Arts Center. In the event of rain the location will be the FAC.

For the second year in a row, UPC is providing us with a more intimate atmosphere by holding the series at the campus pond.

Have you ever been part of a traveling show? The Medieval drama Mary Magdaline will be performed by the University Pond Monday at 4 p.m. Comedy and drama are played out alternatively on several stages with the action beginning on the east steps of Memorial Hall and proceeding to the FAC steps. A cast of over 30 actors complete with Jesus, a chorus of angels, Satan and the Seven Deadly Sins and colorful characters at the court of Marseilles, will perform in modern English. The production is free and is funded by the UMass Arts Council. A preview of Mary Magdaline can be seen Sunday at 5 p.m. Rain date for Monday's performance is Tuesday at 4 p.m. Bring your blankets, as you'll be sitting on the grass.

You can see the University Ensemble Theatre's first musical, Company by Stephen Sondheim tonight, tomorrow and Saturday in the Rand Theater at 8 p.m. Tickets are $2.50 for students and senior citizens and $3.50 for the general public.

With any luck, I'll have a summer theater calendar for the five college area by next week. If you know of any theater productions happening this summer, please call 546-3281 and tell us about it.

Melba Moore, the soul singer best known for her hit "Love's Comin' At Ya," will headline on Saturday.

Coincidentally, Melba Moore portrayed Sheila in the original 1968 Broadway version of the musical Hair, which will be performed at 8 p.m. that night on the same stage.

Preceeding her will be the new popular recording artist Nona Hendryx, whose single "Keep It Confidential" is currently enjoying much airplay.

Guitarist Roy Buchanan, who will be Saturday's opener, has been recording since 1957 and tutored such people as Robbie Robertson (The Band) and is perhaps best known for his distinctive style that merges blues with fifties rock and roll.

With the help of Bruce Springsteen, Gary US Bonds became resurrected on the music scene with the hits "This Little Girl" and "Jole' Blon." His latest album On The Line features another collaboration with Springsteen and also reflects on current economic conditions with such hits as "Hold On" and "Out of Work." This point of view should satisfy us as the headliner on Sunday.

The Preston Porter Band who will open Sunday's show features the soul of rockabilly and will set the tone for Edgar Winters whose music style could be best characterized as the "Lou Reed School of loud noise, flash and pop."

After all this good news, it must be noted that no kegs, bottles or glass containers will be allowed at the concert.

If it's a consolation, food will be available for purchase at the concert from Earthfoods and Food Services.

With a lineup like this one, studying should not be a priority this weekend. By the way, do not harass the swans.

The exceptionally talented Melba Moore will headline UPC's Mystery Series.

Water polo team to play national tournament

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

Hey, do you realize this university has a water polo team. Well, there is a university water polo team and they're a pretty good team.

In fact, the University of Massachusetts women's water polo team is good enough to play in the first ever East Coast water polo tournament next Thursday at Nottingham Pool in Syracuse New York.

In the past, tournament officials have chosen California and Texas as the site of the national tourney but after years of moaning and groaning by East Coast teams that couldn't afford the expenses such a trip entails, finally moved the tournament to the East.

The fact is, the UMass water polo team is poor. Not only do they not even consider heading West for a tournament, but they must combine with the Queens College water polo team to afford the $200 registration fee required to participate in the East Coast tournament.

But that should be no problem because the women have played Queens twice this year, including last weekend at the MIT Invitational held at, (guess where) MIT.

In the first game of the tournament last week, UMass tied MIT 6-6 in a double overtime game before pool officials threw them out because another group was waiting to use the pool.

Stephanie Ward led the scoring for UMass with two goals in the game while Kerry O'Brien, Nancy Stephens, team captain Deb Chisholm and Ann Bonness each netted a goal.

Jenny Schofield handled the goalie duties for UMass, turning away eight shots on the day.

Then UMass lost to Queens 4-2 as Chisholm scored both goals. Now the Minutewomen will take the best players from each team, probably 14 in all, to play in the East Coast tournament against a field of 10 to 12 teams, including squads representing Slippery Rock and Stanford University.

Hopefully, the UMass squad, which almost missed a tournament earlier in the year because of car trouble and nearly didn't have enough players because a few participants slept late, will make this tourney on time.

I bet they will.

SPORTS NOTICE

Undergraduate students must turn in the gym clothes, towels and locks signed out this semester to the equipment rooms (Boyden or NOPE) from where they were issued no later than 5 p.m., Thursday, May 26, 1983. Students will be billed for items not returned through the Bursars office.

Softball forfeit fees are ready to be picked up at the Intramural office.

★ Pearson

team hasn't crossed Pearson's mind.

"I haven't even thought about it," he said.

A couple of guys who opened plenty of holes for Pearson the last two years, offensive lineman Scott LaFond and fullback Tom Murray may also get a shot at pro ball.

LaFond signed as a free agent with the Buffalo Bills. He plans to skip the minicamp to be held next week and will report to the Bills training camp July 15.

Murray is reportedly close to signing with the Cleveland Browns, but this could not be confirmed at press time.

Emerson on hill at McCoy today

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

Excited and confident best describe the feelings of the University of Massachusetts baseball team as it heads to McCoy Stadium in Pawtucket, R.I. today for the start of the ECAC double-elimination playoff tournament, the winner of which advances to the NCAA Regionals and a shot at the College World Series.

UMass will be facing the University of Connecticut at 5 p.m. The other game will involve the favored University of Maine Black Bears against Providence College.

The Minutemen's chances in the playoffs appear as good as any of the teams. Against UConn (15-12-1), UMass (17-15) is 2-0. They won 7-5, behind the pitching of co-captain Bruce Emerson, who is scheduled to start today, and also won a 7-6 game.

In their two games with Maine, the Minutemen were defeated twice, 5-0 and 8-4. The second game, however, was a thrilling extra-inning contest while the shutout was tossed by Maine's super pro prospect Bill Swift, who the Minutemen are not likely to face since he is pitching against PC today.

In the one game UMass played against PC, they narrowly lost a wild one, 5-4.

As past scores show, this tourney can legitimately be considered a toss-up and the players know it.

"We're very psyched," said UMass co-captain, Dean Bennett. "We think we're as good as any of those other teams."

Minuteman slugger Chris Waszczuk observed, "Winning the first game will give us a shot. We probably won't see (Bill) Swift and I think we can beat Maine. We just have to play the way we have been."

The way UMass has been playing included a stretch late in the season where they won 14 of 17 games.

The key to that stretch was the pitching and a defense that has showed vast improvement since the beginning of the season. The hitting, which for a while depended on Waszczuk's eleven home runs and 34 runs batted in, has of late come around.

After today's game, win or lose, UMass will play again Friday at McCoy Stadium. As long as they avoid two losses, the Minutemen will be playing in Pawtucket Saturday and Sunday, when the final will be held.

One thing is for sure, the UMass team has shown a lot of character in weathering a 2-10 start to end up in Pawtucket for the playoffs.

Chris Waszczuk, shown here stealing against Dartmouth last week, will be looking to help the Minutemen win the NCAA playoffs which starts today at 5 p.m. at McCoy Stadium.

Fogarty, Broadwell in East-West game

There hasn't been much to smile about during this year's men's lacrosse season and for senior Paul Fogarty there is even less reason to glimmer the pearly whites.

That's because during last week's 15-7 loss to Syracuse University Fogarty took a shot to the face which resulted in a rearrangement of his incisors, (top front teeth for non-biology majors). Tough luck for Fogarty but good fortune for his dentist who will most likely receive a handsome sum for restoring Paul's good looks.

Jim Floyd

With Fogarty's charismatic mouth out of commission, defenseman Brad Broadwell will have to smile twice as brightly when the twosome represent the Gorillas in this year's East-West All Star Game to be held at Trinity College this Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

This Saturday's lacrosse game against the University of New Hampshire will mark the only time all season that the Gorillas will face an opponent for a second time. In the first meeting way back on April 18, the Wildcats handed UMass a 13-11 loss.

As you read this mental vomit of sports info, Minuteman hoopsters Donald Russell and Edwin Green are airborne and trying to learn how to ask where the bathroom is in Spanish. The two standouts from this year's basketball team were chosen to play on the Atlantic 10 Conference All-Stars and will be playing in an eight-game, 12-day tour of Spain beginning tomorrow.

Speaking of this year's basketball team, the non-Spain bound members of the squad are now involved in a three-on-three tournament and after three games each, Darryl Carter is predicting that his team, which has a 3-0 record will take top honors but Ronny Washington said that Carter will learn not to count his chickens before they're hatched today when action continues in Boyden Gym at 4 p.m.

Yes, that tall stranger standing with his wife and two kids by the fence at Boyden Hill during the Maryland loss was former head basketball coach Tom McLaughlin who is doing just fine thank you.

For some time now, women's sports have been bothered by the lack of fan support received at home games when they did very much to deserve it. Such was the case once again this year but, this time around they were joined by a men's team. No, we won't go into the fair weather fanness of the lacrosse unfaithful (But don't think the lack of support didn't contribute to the lack of wins.), we're talking baseball, baby.

The simple truth is that Lorden Field (Where the local batters play ball) suffers from the same affliction that the fields the women play on. It is not easily accessible to the fans. It is an effort to go to a game and people just don't seem to be willing to make that effort.

A quick look at professional sports: The first mosquito I saw all year appeared hovering around my television screen when I sat up late to watch the final game of the Celtics-Bucks (ouch) series. The first bite came Saturday when the screen revealed the Islander's shaking hands and slapping behinds after eliminating the Bruins.

Sorry Horace, Los Angeles is the team this year in the NBA because in the long run the Kareem always rises to the top.

Softball games postponed

The sun broke through, the diamonds were reasonably dry, and the softball playoff action was in full swing. Within five minutes those same players and fields were covered in a sheet of rain, sleet, and hail, (you name it, it was falling), forcing the postponement of yesterdays semi-final men and women's Intramural softball games.

The games have been rescheduled for this afternoon at 4 p.m. and will be played on the same fields (if they're not swamped by now) as yesterday. Any questions? Call the Intramural office at 5-0022.

Voices are deceiving

The two Boston teams that you expected, or at least hoped, would be in the title hunt till the end are gone. No more Bird jumpers or Parrish jams. No more Middleton scores or Peeters saves. No more till next year.

So now each Boston sports buff must turn elsewhere and around that corner sits the group that succeeds in always breaking your hearts, the Red Sox.

"C'mon," says a voice. "Come inside Fenway. It'll be better than ever. Besides, you know that you want to." The voice is right. You do want to. You want in."

The voice has hit a weak spot. You too have thought about what poetic justice it would be for Yaz to win it all his final year. You're breaking down.

Then the voice makes a mistake. "Heck, who needs Lynn, Burleson, or Fisk? We don't. Not when we've got Armas, Hoffman, and Newman. Okay so maybe they haven't produced a real lot so far, but just watch. They'll make you forget those others."

A bad remark by the voice. All the upsetting incidents of past years start flooding back. All the rotten deals, all the big leads followed by the late season slump. Besides, that voice is starting to sound familiar.

"Trust me," says the voice. "We know what we're doing. We've got it all under control. Come on in. You know you believe. Heck, you've even got renovated seats in there. Cost you a bit more, but you'll be seeing New England's team."

Now, the voice is recognizable. Synonomous with the soothing tone and the new propositions. You turn and see Haywood Sullivan standing in the shadows. Buddy Leroux is beside him, just smiling, not saying a word.

You turn and walk away, before the voice starts in on the pitching. You're tired of hearing it. "But then again," you think. "If Ralph Houk trys to talk me into . . ."

to believe.

"Step right through the gate," the voice continues. "Look at the start the team's gotten off to. They're in first place. Those hated pinstripes from New York aren't even .500. Come in and watch the game."

Sure, it's true. They are in first place. How can you fault a team in first place?

"Think of it," says the voice. "In first now and just wait till they really start getting it cranked up. How about Yaz? His last year. They've gotta win it for the Captain. It's a destined team. Come on

Pearson signs with Seattle

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

At times last football season the University of Massachusetts offense appeared to depend on one man, bobbing and weaving his way into New England and UMass football record books as the all-time leading rusher. His name, of course, is Garry Pearson, and he topped off his fabulous career with a record setting 288 yard performance in his last appearance at Alumni Stadium against American International College.

When the season was over many expected a professional career for Pearson despite his 5'11" frame. Pearson raised a few eyebrows when he by-passed the Boston Breakers offer to play in the USFL to wait for the NFL draft.

Well, he didn't get drafted, but that doesn't bother Pearson. He signed a two year deal with the Seattle Seahawks, and sees this as another opportunity to prove how good a football player he is.

"They have a whole new coaching staff up there so there won't be any prejudices. Everyone will start even," he said.

The Seahawks have a new coach in Chuck Knox and they also have a running back as their first round pick from Penn State named Curt Warner. But not making the Concert no longer a mystery

Several members of Union Program Council climb aboard a scaffold frame near the Campus Pond in preparation of the Mystery Series concerts to be held by the pond this weekend.

Appearing tomorrow — with a start at noon — will be rhythm and blues guitarist Roy Buchanan, Nona Hendryx, whose current hit, "Keep It Confidential," is high on airplay charts, and Melba Moore, former star of the 1968 Broadway version of Hair. An encore University rendition of Hair will be performed at 8 p.m. Saturday.

Sunday, UPC will host the rockabilly Preston Porter band, Edgar Winter, of "Frankenstein" and "Free Ride" fame and the 50s-resurrected rocker, Bruce Springsteen protege, Gary U.S. Bonds. The show Sunday begins at 11 a.m.

Sponsors of the event warn against bringing bottles, can, kegs or other containers to the event. National weather forecasters predict pleasant conditions for the weekend.

BOG outraged at CC space cuts

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

One week after being criticized for their passivity and lack of input on issues, members of the Campus Center Board of Governors last night expressed disbelief and raged heavy debate with the Director of the Campus Center concerning the current proposal to cut lounge space on the ninth floor of the building in half to accommodate a new office for Conference Services.

BOG Vice-Chair Mike Reilly said the space change was announced by Director Bill Harris, Wednesday completely "out of the blue" without any student input or prior notification.

Reilly said the announcement came after a group of students and administrators in the Campus Center, including Harris, had agreed that no changes concerning space with Conference Services would be made until everyone had gone over financial statements of the Service and agreed how much they had to pay into the building.

The people are upset by the way he handled it. We want to have some input into the issue," said BOG member Ron Homa.

"It is not fair for Harris to just railroad something through without telling anybody. Other people should have a say in the issue and alternatives must be heard," said member Barry Salloway.

The BOG is in charge of allocating student meeting room space in the Campus Center and Harris said because the space in question on the ninth floor is public space the BOG therefore has no say in the matter.

"It is not Board territory," Harris said.

However the BOG feels it is their territory because the lounge area on the ninth floor is used heavily by students for studying purposes.

"It is always crowded with students and it is taken for granted that it be kept open," Reilly said.

"We feel anything used that is used or might be used by students is a student affair and therefore it falls under BOG consideration," said BOG member Adam Peck.

Harris said the area is designed as "break out" space for conferences but the fact that students use it has never been objected to.

CC space cut is a space cut

By MARY ANNE BEEN

Study space on the ninth floor of the Campus Center is not being taken away, but rather is being consolidated to accomodate an additional Conference Services office, said William Harris, director of the Campus Center.

"This is not a surprise issue," Harris said. "The space is not being taken away. We are just making better use of it."

According to R. Marc Fournier, sales and program coordinator for Conference Services, his office holds 15 to 20 employees. The office itself is comprised of a main office and three separate rooms, each holding more than three desks.

"All I want to say is that I find it very distracting. I've made mistakes on contracts because of the noise level due to others in the office," said Ron Reid, conference coordinator.

The space in mention, according to Harris, is what is known as "break out" space, similar to a hotel lobby. It is used for conference registration, or for persons attending these conferences to relax. By renovating this space, Conference Services can make available three of four more desks, thereby eliminating present office crowding, Harris said.

"The Campus Center makes 85,000 square feet available for study purposes," Harris said. "This includes the Hatch, the Reading Room and the Cape Cod Lounge. The space on the ninth floor involves roughly 600 feet. The reduction of study space is less than 1 percent.

"Harris' idea of management is ludicrous," said Ron Keefe, chair of the Campus Center Board of Governors. "He is ignoring any possibility of an alternative."

Commuters rely on study space, Keefe said, and these students contribute financially to the well-being of the Center.

"Who's going to tell these students they can't study there any more?" Keefe asked. "Harris talks about space being more efficiently used. Why doesn't he get more tables and chairs on the ninth floor, rather than have people on top of each other?"

"The Board of Governors would be happy to sit down and come up with a longe range strategic plan," Keefe said.

Everett cops found guilty in murder

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — Rose Bordonaro, whose husband died of a beating at the hands of police officers, closed her eyes and leaned back in her seat as the verdicts against the five policemen were read yesterday.

She nodded as the jury foreman, followed by the jury members in unison, intoned "guilty" or "not guilty." Her children seated on each side of her in the Middlesex County Superior courtroom bench held her upright.

In the end, two officers were found guilty of second-degree murder, one guilty of manslaughter and the two others innocent of all charges in the July 23, 1982, brawl at King Arthur's Motel and Lounge on the Chelsea-Everett line.

"It helps," said Mrs. Bordonaro, whose husband, Vincent Bordonaro, 54, described as being disabled from a car accident, died a week after the fight. "Somebody killed my husband, so they must have done it."

Maria Macauda, a cousin of Everett Officer John T. Macauda, found guilty of manslaughter, left court crying.

"I don't believe it," she said. "He's not the kind of person who would do anything like that. I don't believe it."

Nancy McClusky — wife of Everett Officer William J. McClusky, who was found innocent of 21 charges, including murder — said: "I'm real happy. I know he didn't do anything, and I don't think the rest of them did either.

Officer McClusky and Chelsea Officer Michael F. Nadworny, also found innocent, left the courtroom together. McClusky declined to comment, but Nadworny said, "I'm just glad it's over.

Willie Davis, McClusky's lawyer, said his client did not talk to reporters because "he's just overwrought. You have to remember his brother officers have been found guilty."

Frank McGee, lawyer for Everett Officer John W. McLeod, found guilty of second-degree murder, said he planned to appeal.

"He's (McLeod) obviously disappointed and tremendously concerned about his wife and children at this point," McGee said.

Asked about putting a police officer in jail, McGee said, "Jails are overcrowded already, and then you have a police officer there. It's obviously a very serious safety question, and hopefully we're going to find some solution to that."

The lawyer for Everett Officer Richard P. Aiello, also found guilty of second-degree murder, said the verdicts were inconsistent. "He (Aiello) had to be devastated," Attorney Gerald Alch said. "He simply took it as a man."

The chief prosecutor in the case, Daniel Mullane, said afterwards, "In this case, it certainly is an indication that the law enforcement system and the judicial system can cope very well, even if the problems are in the law enforcement system ... I don't agree with everything they (jury) decided, but they worked long and hard, and they did a terrific job."

Alfred J. Mattuchio, a beating victim, said he was disappointed, particularly because no superior officers were prosecuted.

Senate votes to give money to missile plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate committee voted 17-11 yesterday to free money to develop and test the MX missile after President Reagan, for the second time in two days, wrote a letter renewing his commitment to arms control and endorsing the concept of a "build down" of nuclear arms.

The vote by the Senate Appropriations Committee followed two hours of debate, much of it involving Reagan's letter to senators. A day earlier, a similar letter to House members carried the day in a House subcommittee vote on the nuclear-tipped missile Reagan has dubbed the "Peacekeeper."

"I think this is a good faith effort on the part of the president," said Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., who was undecided on how to vote until he read Reagan's letter.

"I am satisfied with the president's response," said Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine. Cohen, while not a member of the appropriations panel, was a prime supporter of the "build-down," which would destroy two nuclear weapons for each new one that is built.

"I'm happy," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the other chief Senate backer of the "build-down."

In his letter, Reagan said "the principle of a mutual build-down, if formulated and implemented flexibly ... would be a useful means to achieve the reductions that we all seek."

The president did not specifically endorse any numbers, such as eliminating two warheads for each new one, and a White House official said the president did not have that specific figure in mind in every instance.

Israeli Foreign Minister says withdrawal pact signed soon

Israel's Foreign Ministry said Israel and Lebanon will exchange final drafts of their troop withdrawal agreement today, and Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir said the pact would be signed "in the coming days."

Shamir spoke yesterday on Israeli Armed Forces radio, shortly before a Lebanese Cabinet meeting in Beirut that was expected to approve the final draft of the agreement.

The Lebanese also sent Foreign Minister Elie Salem to Damascus in an effort to persuade Syrian leaders to drop their opposition to the pact, which depends on Syrian approval to become effective.

In Tel Aviv, Israel's military command said an Israeli soldier was shot dead near Syrian lines in Lebanon late Wednesday, aggravating Israeli-Syrian tension already heightened by the withdrawal accord.

Israeli and Syrian troops confront each other across a ceasefire line in Lebanon and there have been fears that such shooting incidents could touch off major fighting.

U.S. special envoy Philip C. Habib flew from Beirut to Jerusalem to discuss final clarifications requested by Israel for the exchange of drafts Friday in the Israeli seaside town Netanya. The agreement was arranged by Secretary of State George P. Shultz last Friday.

The Foreign Ministry official said the clarifications focused on the roles of Israeli-backed Lebanese Maj. Saad Haddad, duties of a U.N. force in southern Lebanon and the Lebanese-Israeli teams which will patrol a 27-mile-deep security zone north of the Israeli frontier.

Salem went to Damascus to work on what Lebanese sources called "eliminating Syrian fears" about the pact. They said once the agreement is signed, Lebanese President Amin Gemayel will send envoys to other Arab capitals to explain it.

Gemayel and Syrian President Hafez Assad talked for 45 minutes by telephone Wednesday, but details were not released.

Syria has denounced the agreement, saying it violates Lebanese sovereignty, endangers Syrian security and rewards Israel for its invasion last June 6 to smash PLO guerrilla bases.

Israel says it will consider the accord suspended and refuse to pull out its 25,000-man occupation force until Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization start withdrawing their troops.

Local aid threatened by House's budget cuts

BOSTON — The House Ways and Means Committee plans to cut up to $300 million from Gov. Michael Dukakis' proposed $7.36 billion fiscal 1984 state budget, and local aid may be "fair game," a House leadership source said yesterday.

However, House Ways and Means Chairman Michael Creedon commented that, "I'd say local aid is sacred at this point."

He declined comment on how much might be cut elsewhere from the bill.

Creedon and Senate Ways and Means Chairman Chester G. Atkins called an off-the-record budget briefing for reporters yesterday afternoon. They went on the record when reporters refused to go along with their groundrules, but they wouldn't discuss specifics.

The two said they are still at odds with the Dukakis administration over how deeply in the red his budget recommendations are, but they want the governor to take the initiative in coping with the problem.

This, they said, could delay passage of the bill beyond the July 1 start of the new fiscal year. But if that happens, a temporary budget will be passed in time to avoid disruptions in services, they said.

Possible breakthrough in AIDS is reported

WASHINGTON — Scientists have established a tenuous link between a rare cancer virus and a deadly immune system disease, in a move that researchers say represents an exciting new lead in unraveling the mystery of the affliction known as AIDS.

The scientists found evidence of the cancer virus in some AIDS patients and some people with a condition that may be a precursor to the disease. Its origin is unknown and there is no cure.

AIDS, which stands for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, is a condition that irreparably breaks down the body's disease-fighting immune system. In the process, it knocks out a type of defensive white blood cell called a T-cell.

Of the more than 1,350 people known to have acquired AIDS in the United States, 500 have died and experts suspect that mortality eventually will exceed 70 percent.

Buzz, buzz go the mosquitoes in North East

Swarms of mosquitoes hatched in the Northeast's wettest spring on record are taking to the air, and bug experts expect the worst infestations in years in many areas of the nation.

But not everywhere.

In the bayou country of Louisiana, where the mosquito is considered the state "bird," repeated flooding and heavy rains in April flushed out the mosquito larvae, said George Carmichael, director of the New Orleans Mosquito Contol Board.

"We had so much rain that it actually may have benefitted us," he said.

By contrast, health officials in Arizona — hardly a swampy state — have reported the earliest cases of mosquito-borne equine encephalitis in 109 years of record-keeping.

In much of the Northeast, the mosquitoes are expected to start hatching within a week or two.

In Connecticut, home to 40 varieties of the bugs, the almost 26 inches of rain so far this year will almost guarantee a huge and hungry crop, according to John Anderson, chief entomologist for the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station.

Education faces drastic cuts in budget fight, Knapp says

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp yesterday predicted "education is not going to escape" when the state budget axe drops following Wednesday's announcement of deficit problems in the state budget.

"Everything you read in the newspaper about the uncertainty of the budget situation is absolutely true," Knapp said, referring to a Boston Globe article yesterday that reported estimates of a $200 to $500 million shortfall for fiscal year 1984.

However, "how much (the education budget will be cut as a result) and how much in relation to other areas is still not clear," Knapp told a monthly meeting of the Professional Association of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst (PAUMA) Senate.

Although Knapp said the University will not be severely affected by any re-adjustment resulting from the discovered deficit, he feared the state legislature might be tempted to defer items such as building maintenance and library upkeep.

"We just can't let that accumulate," Knapp said of the cost of such items which eventually must be paid for. "The bill is going to become so substantial no one is going to want to pay for it."

Knapp also disagreed with the admissions standards plan passed this week by the Massachusetts Board of Regents, which for the first time will require all public colleges and universities to adhere to centralized admissions guidelines.

The plan, to be gradually implemented over the next four years, will require students to take a minimum curriculum of English, math, science, and language courses, as well as achieve a minimum level of combined class rank and Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores.

"While you use SATs and high school rank as a screening process, you have to look at the individual" to make a true assessment, Knapp said.

Increases in applications result of UMass reputation

By PAULA HOYT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts this year received 22 percent more applications for September enrollment than last year, but a smaller entering class of students with "stronger academic profiles" is expected, according to undergraduate admissions figures.

This year, 16,791 applications were received, the largest number since an application fee was initiated, director of freshman admissions Dave Taggart said. Last year 13,762 applications were received, he said.

The larger number of applicants is largely because of the improving academic reputation of UMass and difficult economic times, Taggart said.

"Obviously, there has been a very rapid emergency of knowledge about the academic quality of the programs at the University," he said.

Taggart said the lower cost of UMass compared to private institutions also accounts for the increase in applicants.

Of the applicants, the University has accepted 11,055 for September admission compared to 10,852 acceptances last year. The entering class of 1987 is expected to be about 4,100. Last year, the University had its largest freshman class ever, with 4,323 students enrolled, Taggart said.

He said the academic profiles of applicants are much stronger this year than they have been over the past three or four years.

"The average student profile shows a 14 point increase in verbal (Scholastic Aptitude Test scores), and a 16 point increase in math (SATs) over last year. The applicants are also three percent stronger in class rank this year," Taggart said.

The final figures on student profiles wil not be tabulated until late September, he said.

As of Monday, 3,987 of those accepted had paid fees and are planning to enter UMass in the fall, Taggart said. Some of the remaining 7,068 accepted students may choose competitive private schools for which they are academically qualified, he said.

An important factor in the students' choice is the availability of financial aid packaging at other schools, especially the private institutions in Massachusetts, Taggart said. He said these schools are the primary competitors of UMass, and the amount of financial aid they offer in comparison is a major deciding factor.

A waiting list of more than 1,500 students will be held until June 1, when more definite figures on the freshman class size can be determined. The number of students on the waiting list to be accepted for September admission wil depend on how many incoming freshman have orientation fees by June, Taggart said. All waiting list students are offered January admission, but only a small number accept, Taggart said. He said in the past two or three years, September admission has not been granted to those on the waiting list.

Another reason for the smaller entering class next year is that the retention of upperclass students at the university is up, Taggart said. The University planned to allow a smaller amount of students in next year to accomodate the increased number of students on campus, he said.

The University received 5,054 out of state applications this year for 615 openings.

"The competition between out of state applicants is severe," Taggart said.

Students are realizing that they are in a "buyer's market," and are applying to many more colleges than before, Taggart said. The number of high school graduates is dwindling and the students applying have access to many more schools, especially private ones, he said. Each students applies to about 8 to 10 schools, and all levels of colleges are considering more applicants, Taggart said.

Colleges name speakers

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

Mount Holyoke and Smith College have announced speakers and honorary degree recipients for their respective commencement exercises, both to be held Sunday, May 22.

George Steiner, writer and literary critic, will give the commencement address at the South Hadley women's college according to the Mount Holyoke Office of Public Relations.

His major works include Language and Silence, The Death of Tragedy, In Bluebeard's Castle and After Babel. He is a fellow at Churchill College at Cambridge University, England and a professor of English and Comparative literature at Geneva University.

Smith College will host Thomas C. Mendenhall, President of the college before current president Jill Conway, as its commencement speaker. Mendenhall was a recipient of an honorary doctorate of law from Smith in 1978.

Honorary degree recipients at Smith college are as follows: Eleanor Holmes Norton, former chair of the Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; Julia M. Walsh, founder and chair of the Julia M. Walsh Inc. Investment Firm and the first woman on the American Stock Exchange; and Ase Gruda Skard, psychologist and educator.

Commencement opens at 1:30 at the Quadrangle and exercises begin at 2:15.

Mount Holyoke recipients are: artist Isabel Bishop; Irish playwright Denis Johnston; Ruth Lawson, Mount Holyoke professor emeritus of Science: George Steiner; Zara Shakow Steiner, historian at Cambridge University; and Dr. Ruth Whittemore of the Yale University School of Medicine.

Commencement exercises begin at 3:45 p.m. in the Richard Glenn Gettell Amphitheater.

Grievance panel is set up to handle harassment charges

By MARY BALDWIN
and PEGGY SHAW
Collegian Staff

A Sexual harassment grievance panel has been set up on campus as required by (a new) policy, implemented at the University of Massachusetts last November.

The 13-member hearing panel was appointed by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey late last semester and is now fully in service but has yet to formally hear a complaint, said Jay Savereid, a member of the new panel.

The panel decides whether a grievance is justifiable and they suggest a proposed penalty for the offender and relief for the aggrieved party, said Howard Gadlin, Ombudsman.

For instance if a woman was fired from her job as a result of sexual harrassment, the panel may recommend she be reinstated, he said.

The policy defines sexual harrassment as "any unwelcomed sexual advance, requests for sexual favors and other verbal or physical conduct of sexual nature."

To be considered sexual harassment, the conduct must be "used as a term or condition of an individual's employment or academic work, affect decisions in the work or academic place, or unreasonably interfere with an individual's work performance or create an intimidating, hostile, or offensive working or academic environment," according to the policy.

The Working Women United Institute defines sexual harassment as any repeated and unwanted sexual advance, looks, jokes, innuendoes, constant leering, ogling, "accidently" brushing against the body, a "friendly" pat, squeeze or pinch. The Institute says it is being judged by one's looks or body rather than ability, experience or job performance. It means that job security is eternally dependent on how well a boss is pleased. It is being fired because of having aged, because of gaining too much independence, being "uncooperative" or because 'no' is the response to a proposal of a sexual nature.

Savereid said the victim of sexual harassment tends to be isloated.

"The harassed person is somewhat reluctant to complain to anyone," he said.

"It's not uncommon for the victim to say, "Well, I won't do anything about this now" or consider their complaints as not grievable forms of harassment," Savereid said.

The panel comprises two faculty members, two members of the professional staff, four classified employees, two undergraduate students, two graduate students and one administrative representative.

Grievances of sexual harassment are handled either formally by the panel or informally by the Ombudsman office at UMass.

"The formal procedure makes people more receptive to the informal procedure," said Gadlin who mediates informal grievances.

"In the past year there have been dozens of inquiries about the informal procedure and incidences," Gadlin said. "There haven't been more than half a dozen that have been mediated."

When handled informally, the policy states that appropriate relief should be provided for the victim and the offender should be sensitized to the effect sexual harassment has on the victim.

For example, if someone felt they had been given a poor performance evaluation, we may ask that the evaluation be thrown out or rewritten as a means of appropriate relief, Gadlin said.

Sensitizing of the offender goes on during the mediation of the case, he said. "We try to sensitize the offender in an educational way and not punitively," he said.

Sexual harassment offenders are given literature on the subject and asked to attend sexual harassment workshops, he said.

If after following the informal procedure, a settlement cannot be made, the case in sent to the sexual harassment panel where it becomes formal.

Cars collide on Main Street results in citation while Amherst cops report various incidents

Amherst Police reported the collision of two cars Wednesday at 8 p.m. on Main Street.

The first vehicle, merging from Lessey Street onto Main Street, hit the second vehicle, driven by a University of Massachusetts student east on Main Street.

The driver of the first car, a 20-year-old from Nashville, Tennessee, was issued a citation for failing to exercise caution at an intersection and was taken to University Health Services, police said.

Two separate incidents of robbery were reported at Puffton Village apartments Wednesday evening, police said.

At 7:40 p.m. a resident reported the theft of her purse containing a small amount of cash and credit cards. Police said access to the apartment was gained through the unlocked front door while the victim was showering.

Less than two hours later, another Puffton Village resident reported a forced entry and the theft of camera equipment, a back pack and cash, with a total value $500. Police said the burglar entered the apartment through a sliding window.

A 20-year-old Hopkington woman was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol on Fearing street Wednesday night. Police said they stopped the vehicle after observing the driver turn left on a red light. The driver was released on her personal recognizance, police said.

Chancellor Duffey's garden to be dedicated to UMass professor of landscape architecture

Gordon S. King, professor of landscape architecture at the University of Massachusetts, will be the honoree at the dedication of the Rhododendron Garden on campus Monday.

The garden is located directly below the Chancellor's house and served as commencement location for many years until the mid-1950's.

The garden is undergoing extensive renovations which will include 400 new plants, replacement of the original fountain and construction of a stone wall.

Professor's films in New York

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Staff

Two films by Liane Brandon, independent filmmaker and an associate professor at the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts will be shown as part of a film retrospective at the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

Brandon is an award-winning filmmaker whose works including Sometimes I Wonder Who I Am, Betty Tells Her Story, Anything You Want to Be and Once Upon a Choice. The latter two films will be shown as part of the retrospective and were designed to present positive role models for young girls.

Once Upon a Choice tells the story of a young princess who must decide which of three suitors she will marry. She ultimately chooses to marry none of them, but rather to travel while she makes up her mind.

The idea for the film came as a reaction to traditional images often portrayed in fables and fairy tales, she said.

"I became tired of reading about blonde, blue-eyed, passive princesses just waiting to be rescued," Brandon said.

"Young people needed a new role model," she said. The princess in Once Upon a Choice is slightly chubby, independent, has a more realistic set of priorities and in general is more interesting a female character than one finds in fairy-tales.

The program, which will run from June 17-21, will feature the works of New Day films,a distribution cooperative that specializes in films, addressing important social issues.

New Day was founded in 1972 by four feminist filmmakers, and today represents 29 filmmakers, including Claudia Weill, Bonnie Friedman and Joyce Chopra, Brandon said.

A co-founder of New Day, Brandon was recently elected to the board of the Boston Film and Video Foundation. She will go on sabbatical from the University next semester to work on a new film, How to Prevent a Nuclear War.

The new film will be an informational examination of different types of grass-roots activities designed to combat the dangers of nuclear war, she said.

Former Carter aide speaks on women, Reagan, and politics

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Staff

Someone's gender should never interfere with an individual's professional ambitions, according to Lucy Wilson Benson, the current consultant, corporate director, and chairman of the National News Council.

Benson is one of 18 members of the National News Council drawn from the country and representing various occupations and shades of opinion. The Council is an independent, non-profit, non-governmental and voluntary organization established to serve the public interest. It provides a forum through which any individual can present a complaint when an injustice has been done because of inaccurate and unfair reporting of the news.

Amherst resident Benson said, "If a woman is hard-working and conscientious, she should have no problem doing whatever she wants to do. If she lets her sex interfere with her professional goals, then that's her fault. If a woman uses her sex to advance herself towards a higher position, then she doesn't deserve any respect."

"I am one such politician who does not focus on the issue of gender," she said. As a spokesperson for politics, her responsibilities have involved her in contacts with Congress and with leaders of foreign governments.

While currently involved in the freedom, fairness and accuracy of journalistic issues on the National News Council, Benson served under the Carter administration from 1977 to 1980. She was appointed by the president as Under Secretary of State for Security Assistance, Science and Technology in the U.S. Department of State.

Benson sees Carter's biggest failure to be attributed to his inability to deal with people. He always managed to give the impression that he never knew what he was doing, she said. When he was first elected, people had much hope and confidence in his policies, but when he left office, people were quite disillusioned. He never could command the loyalty that a good leader needs from his public, Benson said.

According to Benson, Ronald Reagan is a more effective president. Contrary to Carter, he is a great communicator and is able to relay what he wants to get across to the public, she said. Although she knew Carter well, Benson doesn't really know Reagan. Benson said she is worried over Reagan's foreign policies but has much confidence in George Schultz' diplomacy.

"Even Reagan is learning. He's making compromises, not fighting too hard on issues like the abortion question, the school prayer and any time, now an agreement might be reached on the arms control question," she added.

Benson predicted that unless the democrats can pull their act together, Reagan will be re-elected as President in the 1984 elections. She said the issue that will come down to be the deciding factor is the nation's economy. People are most concerned with the present state of economy.

"If the economy is good and unemployment rates are decreased by the end of Reagan's term, there is no doubt in my mind that Reagan will win," she said.

Before she served under Carter, Benson worked under Michael S. Dukakis for one year during his first term as governor. As state secretary of Human Services, she said she watched Dukakis make a lot of opponents. The governor is an interesting and able person to work with, she said. He was governor when the state was faced with one of the most severe problems of income and handled it well, she said.

Benson has also been President of the League of Women Voters of the U.S. Massachusetts and Amherst, positions that involved discussing and deciding government and citizen issues.

Cassette players stolen from UMass part of list of items taken from campus

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

A $550 AM/FM stereo cassette player, stolen from a car parked by the water tower near Lot 49 Wednesday, is only one of many similar radios reported stolen Wednesday, University of Massachusetts police said yesterday.

The stereo was removed from under the dash by perpetrators who gained entrance through the passenger side door. Damage to the dash was estimated at $200, police said.

Another AM/FM stereo cassette player and a set of door speakers were reported taken from a car in Lot 22 between 10:30 p.m. Sunday and 12:30 p.m. Wednesday, police said.

An AM/FM stereo cassette player and a sun roof unit were reported stolen from a 1982 Volkswagen in P-lot by fraternity/sorority park, police said.

Police said an officer observed the driver's side window partially down Wednesday in the rain. Upon approaching the car the officer noticed the passenger side vent window smashed and the sunroof unit missing. The total value was estimated at $750.

In other police action:

● More than $500 worth of baseball equipment was reported stolen from the Earl Lorden baseball field Wednesday, police said. Equipment stolen included a catcher's helmet, catcher's mask, catcher's body protector, four aluminum baseball bats, 60 baseballs and five helmets.

Perpetrators gained entrance between 5 p.m. Tuesday and 7 a.m. Wednesday by prying a lock on a fieldhouse door.

● A Volkswagen Rabbit was turned on its side sometime Wednesday night in Lot 22, police said, damaging much of its left side and the driver's side of a Ford LTD it was parked next to.

● A Chevrolet Chevelle parked on the second level of the Campus Center Garage received extensive damage to its front left side in a hit and run accident, police said.

The car's left fender, left front quarter panel and a headlight, with a total value of $600, were damaged in the incident. The car was dragged 20 feet into the roadway of the garage, police said.

Annex tags professors for low refund on students' used books

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

Because many University of Massachusetts professors have been submitting late orders to the Textbook Annex for books they will require in next semester's classes, students will receive less money than usual for books the Annex is now buying back.

According to Textbook Annex Assistant Manager Dean Scudder, the biggest problem the Annex has concerning its "used book buy - back policy" is the majority of the faculty's failure to submit book orders to the Textbook Annex for next semester by the April 15th deadline.

"Only 50 percent of the faculty placed orders by April 15th," Scudder, said.

"It's a real disservice to the students that they didn't meet the deadline," he continued. "We could double the amount of money we pay students if the lists were submitted on time."

The Annex placed advertisements in the Collegian in April urging the faculty to order next semester's books early so the Annex would know by finals week which books to buy back from students.

The annex pays 50 percent of the original list price if the used book is to be used next semester. It resells the same book with a 25 percent discount off of the listed price.

Used books that are not required for next semester have no resale value, Scudder said. But the Annex might buy it for a low price depending on how many copies remain in stock.

"The low prices are determined by used book wholesales," he said. "The amount of money we pay students is based on the resale market value price."

The used book wholesaler buys the books and ships them to a central warehouse and redistributes them on the national market.

Many students interviewed recently were unhappy with the Annex's used book return policy, because they thought the Annex pays them less money than their books were worth.

Freshman Mary Brocci said last semester the Annex paid her 50 cents for books originally worth $12.95.

Jeanne Goetz, also a first year student, said the Annex should give students "at least half of what you paid for your books."

The publisher has the most input in establishing book prices. The Annex is required to discount books because of a requirement in the original mandate charter for the Annex, but "it is also because of the volume of books ordered that we can afford to discount," Scudder said.

Fall semester week delayed

By DAVID MUNIZ
Collegian Staff

To accomodate worshippers of Rosh Hashana, the Jewish New Year, four of the five area colleges have revised their academic calendars.

Joining Amherst, Smith and Hampshire Colleges, the University of Massachusetts revised their calendar to accomodate the New Year celebration. The UMass Faculty Senate pursuaded the administration to push the beginning of the fall semester one week further to avoid opening on the holiday, celebrated Sept. 7 and 8. Registration for fall classes has been changed to Sept. 12.

The holiday begins at sunset Sept. 7 and ends at sunset the next day. It is one of the more solemn of Jewish holy days.

Smith College will hold day classes Wednesday, Sept.7 but will cancel that nights' classes, and morning and afternoon classes Thursday. Those day's classes will be rescheduled at the option of the professor.

At Amherst College, the first day of classes is September 9.

A representative of the college explained Amherst always starts later than UMass and other colleges. "The Jewish holiday doesn't affect us that much," she added.

Russell Powell of Hampshire College said Hampshire's classes start on Sept. 12, with an orientation program from Monday, Sept. 5, to Saturday, Sept 10. "The calendar was made up several months ago," he added.

At Mt. Holyoke, classes will begin on Sept. 12. Originally the Mt. Holyoke calendar acknowledged the holiday, but still scheduled an orientation program to begin on Sept. 6. After some complaints from members of the Jewish Student Union, the schedule was revised. An extra day has been added to the schedule in order to accomodate the holiday.

Andrea Zieklin, of Hillel, a UMass Registered Student Organization (RSO) addressing the needs and affairs of the UMass Jewish community, explained the meaning of Rosh Hashana to the Jewish people. "The mood of Rosh Hashana is threefold: it is a day of judgement, of being solemn, of reconciling oneself with what has happened in the past year. It is new year's day, the beginning of the Jewish calendar, and the birthday of the world. It is both a solemn and joyous day."

Brisbane Australia bidding for World University Games

By RICHARD MARTIN
Collegian Staff

BRISBANE, AUSTRALIA — After successfully hosting the British Commonwealth Games in 1982, both the city of Brisbane and the University of Queensland are bidding vigorously to host the 1987 World University Games, which they see as a stepping stone to a successful bid for the 1992 Olympics.

"We're regarding the World Student Games in 1987 as the second step, with the Commonwealth Games the first step and the Olympics the third step. By being able to handle 5,000 athletes and officials from 94 countries at the Student Games, it would give our bid for the Olympics that much more credibility," said Mark Rudder, special consultant for the city of Brisbane during the bidding period. Rudder had previously worked for the national TV network, the Australian Broadcasting Company, until he was hired for the sole purpose of a consultant over the next nine months.

Brisbane officials have been comparing their city to the city of Alberta,Canada, which successfully hosted the 1978 British Commonwealth Games and is the host city for the 1983 World University Games, which are held every two years.

"We believe Brisbane did the best job ever of hosting the Commonwealth Games in 1982. Not only that but we have the economic base and the growth potential to expand even better that Edmonton. Our new sports complexes and sub-tropical climate are our main selling points," Rudder said.

Rudder said the main competition for hosting the 1987 World University Games will come from Indianapolis, Indiana, and Zagreb,Yugoslavia.

Since the United States has not hosted the World University Games in 20 years, Indianapolis could take the bid, Rudder said.

"They've been stressing the fact that they can handle a large influx of people because they do it every year with the Indianapolis 500 auto race," he added.

"One reason Zagreb might get it is because the Games officials have given the games to a Communist bloc country every four years for the past 10 years," Rudder said.

The games were held in Moscow (1973), Sofia, Bulgaria (1977), and Bucharest, Rumania (1981).

Brisbane is rapidly undertaking changes which would facilitate the handling of both the World University and Olympic Games.

Newly-elected Prime Minister of Australia Bob Hawke, in a letter to the Brisbane city council, reaffirmed National Government support for the expanded construction of the Brisbane International Airport. The newly-constructed Gateway Bridge crosses the Brisbane River within the vicinity of the airport and the new Boondall Sports Complex.

In addition to the new Boondall Sprots Complex, which would be home for basketball, gymnastics, handball, field hockey, judo, diving and volleyball, the City Council is upgrading the Queen Elizabeth II Stadium and the Sleeman Sports Complex. The QE II Stadium is being enlarged from a 62,000 to 95,000 seating capacity. The Sleeman Complex will house a cycling velodrome, wrestling, weightlifting, and synchronized swimming.

Perhaps Brisbane's major obstacle to obtaining the bid is the housing for visiting athletes and officials. The city's two universities, the University of Queensland and Griffith University, barely hold 4,000 visitors. Negotiations are currently underway with private enterprises for building on city-council property, "Sports Villages,"which would later become apartment buildings.

Brisbane, however, could become the host of the Games if they highlight their best advantages, Rudder said, like the climate and the large tourist industry. But the prime selling factor is the facilities.

Finally, because of Brisbane's governmental structure, the city council has jurisdiction over an expansive metropolitan area. Although its population (including suburbs) is only about one and a half million people, it covers an area almost as large as Los Angeles. This means that the city council has been able and will be able to undertake projects without any political obstacles.

"We're very keen on getting both of them. We figure that we have great new facilities which will be finished by 1986 as part of the city's 1988 Bicentennial celebration. We showed the British Commonwealth countries what Brisbane is all about in 1982. We knocked 'em on their bloody ears. Now we want to show the rest of the world what Brisbane, and Australia, are all about," Rudder said.

DER BOOBY TRAP

A cure for distractions . . .

You've had a terrific spring, probably the best one of your life. Those two roadtrips to the Cape left you with the best suntan in Central and Southwest combined. Your social life has been phenomenal — you've been to every cultural event that's hit UMass, and the bartenders at Delano's know you by name. Yes, you've chugged down your fair share of brewskies this semester. No need to worry, though, your excellent physical condition is a result of the tennis matches you've been practicing for — and winning.

However, as the sun sets on yet another day in the "Happy Valley," and you drop your aluminum racket on the floor, you realize there's another area; one in which you have not been quite so diligent. An area in which athletic prowess means nothing. An area in which social graces are useless. Dare I name it? The area in question is studying.

Ah, yes . . . intellectual pursuits, the reason you favor the university with your presence. You've thoughtlessly neglected a goodly-sized chunk of this semester-long, academic endeavor. (Which, incidentally, you've momentarily payed through the nose for). Simply stated, you just haven't done any homework.

You hesitantly approach your desk, gently brushing the cobwebs from the two-foot-high stack of unopened textbooks, (retail value, $136.95, plus tax), cringing as the resident daddy-long-legs scurries for cover. While still courageous, you excavate various syllabuses, (or is it syllabi?) and check to see how long a haul you'll be facing in the next two weeks.

The investigation does not reveal a pretty picture. Your chemistry final is right around the corner, and you still can't remember which microscopic do-hickeys are negatively charged, the protons, or the electrons? Your Japanese exam is coming up, too, and your attendance in that class has been less than adequate. The only words you can recall are kimono and Kyoto, and you're not even sure whether they're racist. Furthermore, you have a 15 page paper to write for Modern Novels, and all you've read are the modern Monarch Notes. and to top it off, you don't remember what your Independent Study project is, or who agreed to sponsor it.

Before too long, you bump into a serious young woman carrying almost as many books as you are. She's got a pencil behind one ear, and a higherlighter behind the other. You decide she looks studious, and thus ask,

"Excuse me, can you tell me where the library is?"

"Well, that depends on which library you want to go to; UMass has several," she smiles. You could swear she lit up upon hearing the word, library. "Goodell and the Tower are very popular, although many students prefer the Music Library, Morrill Library, the library in the Newman Center, Coolidge Tower Library, and the Physical Sciences Library. And if you don't mind going off campus, there's both the Jones Library and Amherst College's Robert Frost Library."

"Yeah. Um, thanks," you say weakly as she departs. People like that are enough to make you sick. Fortunately, a nice, average-looking man is walking toward you. He looks tired; there are circles under his eyes, and he's putting effort into every step he takes.

"Can you tell me where the library is?" you ask him. He loks at you, and breaks into a fit of uncontrolled laughter.

"You're not serious?" he snickers, falling to his knees in exhaustion and mirth. "Where's the library?" he mimics you, writhing with glee. "That's the best one I've heard in ages!"

Elizabeth Luciano as a Collegian columnist

When being clean just isn't quite good enough

Everyone needs time to just get away to be themselves and think for a while. Unfortunately, most of us don't have schedules that allow us to take this necessary time. Personally, I find my time for contemplation in the shower.

There's almost nothing I like better than getting stoned and taking a steamy hot shower. And long. It has to be long. Long enough so that I have to open my gills and moss starts growing on my joints.

Mary Beth Hebert

As the wrinkles deepen on my skin, my thoughts grow deeper too. Sometimes I think about school. As I'm washing my hair, I'll try to figure out how many classes of Food Science and Nutrition 101 I've missed. "One-scrub, two-scrub, three-scrubs more, I need to pass this final E-core." Or I'll start to wonder what the sensational sausage and the controversial chicken in the Hatch will be renamed.

Other times I'll think about what I'm going to do now that I'm graduating. I try to imagine job interviews. But my imagination just isn't that good. I try to imagine writing a resume. But my imagination just isn't that creative. I try to imagine composing a cover letter, but reality shows I'm bare.

I'm not one of those kind of people who sing in the shower. The last time I did, I had a moose knocking on the bathroom door, supposedly in response to my call. Instead, I usually listen to the radio. One of my favorite ploys is to call up my favorite radio station and using a bunch of aliases, request all of my favorite music so I have ample entertainment in my own little private spa.

I'm not a cleanaholic either. There are some people I know who have shampoo routines that make Vidal Sasson's three-step-process look like a quickie at an automatic carwash. They have a separate lotion for every part of their body, and are inevitably the same people who will, in the same routine, brush, floss, water pic and floride-rinse their teeth.

I like to do math in the shower too. I know it sounds bizarre, but there's a really good reason for doing it there. You see, I'm a really bad mathematician and am generally embarassed to write down any of my equations on a piece of paper in fear that any other mortal being might stumble onto them and recognize me for the numerical ninny I am. Instead, I write out all my basic math (the only kind I know) on the steamed walls of the stall. Well, it's a step up from initials and hearts.

Some people like to exercise in the shower. It kills two birds with one stone. They sweat and the water automatically cleans them. There's only one problem . . . So far we've had to replace three ceilings when the exercising has gotten too vigorous.

Other things that I think about when I'm in the shower fall into the category of stupid stuff. Like if cows that give non-dairy cream eat astro-turf, or if David Letterman calls the people he calls before he calls them so they know he's calling. Maybe some of the soap suds have affected my brain.

Of course, spending as much time in the shower as I do tends to leave one an open target for all sorts of bad things. First of all, I almost always miss phone calls since I can't hear the damn thing ring through the pounding surf. And then, there's the sitting duck factor. You have nowhere to go if you're trapped in a shower. That's how bill collectors and roommates have been successfully able to nab me. Not that the two are mutually exclusive. And when you're in the shower, you can fall victim to all kinds of terrible pranks. Like having the hot water shut off, or snow thrown in, or even worse; dishwashing liquid.

But I'm willing to brave all these dangers for just a few minutes of solace with my rubber duckie. Showering with a friend is definitely what it's quacked up to be.

Sold on rock 'n' roll

To the Editor:

I would like to comment on the editorial "Rock 'n' Roll is bad for the soul" written by Josh Meyer. Everyone has a right to an opinion, however, why must readers be subjected to unjustified and ridiculous sarcasm? The author didn't agree with the presentation and if I had been present, I probably would have found fault with it as well. However, dismissing an entire issue (of which the author knows little) because of a particular presentation of it is ignorance. This attitude is on par with those who condemn all rock music by virtue of the fact that certain artists use it for destructive purposes.

And yes, there are artists who use the medium of music to manipulate the minds and emotions of their listeners. I find it hard to dismiss the fact that a song like "Stairway to Heaven" has back masking with messages about Satan as mere coincidence when one of the composers is heavily into the occult. I also marvel at the power exerted by some artists over their listeners at a concert. I fear the types of messages proclaimed by them and how easily these messages are accepted and followed. Music is a powerful medium; one that affects a lot more than we realize. However, music also proclaims love, beauty, and goodness. Therefore, all rock music should not be condemned. Some artists have even chosen to proclaim the Christian message through rock. As Larry Norman sings "Why should the Devil have all the good music?" I suggest, no, I urge people to really listen to what you're hearing and be aware of what influences you're permitting to affect you.

A second point I'd like to address is the issue of freedom from responsibility that Mr. Meyers discusses. Our lives are full of decisions for which we are responsible. Don't worry about the rest of the world, your heart and soul are your responsibility — which do you choose?

The King isn't a fink

To the Editor:

This opinion is in reference to the letter by Jay D. Gale of Amherst which dealt with a planned demonstration on Graduation Day. Jay, my letter has nothing to do with politics. I'm sure you have wonderful reasons for hating Ed King. This opinion has more to do with common courtesy and maturity than anything.

As I read your letter, I wondered what percentage of the graduating class felt this strongly about Ed King. Surely not 100 percent.

I've worked hard to earn my college degree and I feel insulted that some people that hate Ed King want to make him aware of it at my graduation. I'm sure you would have liked to have seen Julius Erving at Commencement, but the fact is that you got Ed King. I can't do anything about that but I can only ask you that you and your supporters give him what he deserves — a little respect! Someone as conscious as yourself should be aware of how many times the university has been dragged through the mud. Let's not do it again.

I guess what I would really like to say to you and your supporters is to be part of the 23 percent that don't attend graduation. Don't force your ignorance on me!

Here's to the losers

To the Editor:

Some groups are born to lose; the Celtics, the Bruins, the Red Soxs, and students at a large western Massachusetts university. Did you ever notice how much fun it can be to support one of these teams? I always feel like I'm cheering for the underdog; even when their on top, I feel like they're on the bottom. It's exciting. Mom and apple pie, Bullwinkle and Rocky Squirrel, these things make me feel good but this year, let's face it . . . I mean some group of jokers really has it in for this crowd. Who decided that Ed King would get a Doctorate of Broken Laws?

I don't know about you people, but where I come from we don't give consolation prizes to loser. "Edward the King I am, Edward the King am I, ate a big piece of the UMass pie." Personally I hope he chokes, just as we students have choked on every piece of detrimental legislation he crammed down our throats, or the vetoes of good legislation that would have helped us to achieve a better higher education. Not that Edward the King doesn't stand for higher education, he does, higher priced.

If the Trustees of the University of Mass. want to give Ed King a consolation prize, then they should give him a Unichusetts of Massaversity t-shirt. He'd like that.

Oh, my sincere condolences to the Celtics, Bruins, and Red Sox.

Commencement 1983
10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 28
University of Massachusetts at Amherst

Instruction for Participants

All Candidates
There will be no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 28, 1983. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college.

Who is Eligible to Participate?

Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1983. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master's degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 29, 1983 to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 29, 1983. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center 545-0024

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTHWEST end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities/Information Center and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early to ensure good seating. Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each undergraduate/graduate student will receive a packet of six formal invitations. Students are urged to encourage their guests to arrive early for good seating.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods

Undergraduate Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Master's Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., upon presentation of an I.D. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each Ph.D. candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the university will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A251 Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $26. [Five College Doctoral Hoods will be available at $42.95.]

Rentals for Faculty
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their rental orders as soon as possible: THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS WEDNESDAY, MAY 18. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds if apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Szelewicki at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for Friday before Commencement. A limited number of rooms in University housing will be available for relatives and other guests the nights of May 27 and 28. Please contact the University Summer Conference Office, 918 Campus Center, 545-3400, by May 10. Fees: $15 single/$21 double, per night. SGA supports Mississippi U. blacks

By TRACY ROBBINS
and ROBERT TEIXEIRA
Collegian Staff

The admission of the first black student to the University of Mississippi in 1963 sparked intense rioting that left two people dead in its wake.

In 1983 the student body is 93 percent white while the state of Mississippi is more than 50 percent black. Meanwhile only 6 of 504 faculty members of the University are black.

Until April of this year, Confederate flags were displayed at all official school functions, and the University bought and distributed 9,000 Confederate flags at each football game.

The recently published 'Ole Miss' Yearbook has included pictures of robed Ku Klux Klan members, and black students there have protested the photos.

In response, on the night of April 18, over 1,000 white students marched on a black fraternity house, chanting "save the flag," "nigger night," and "dixie," screaming 'come outside' to the students inside.

The University's Public Relations Director called this disgusting racist attack, "nothing but a pep rally."

The Black Student Union in response to the conditions has demanded an increase in the hiring of black and minority faculty and administration, a black studies program, the hiring of an affirmative action officer, an increase of minority enrollment, the end of official displays of the Confederate flag, University store sales, and free distribution of the Confederate flag, the singing of 'Dixie' at all official school events, and the elimination of 'Colonel Rebel' as the school mascot.

Chancellor Porter Fortune agreed only to stop University distribution of Confederate flags, and displays of the flag at official events. University store sales of the flag have skyrocketed, and the flags are displayed all over campus by white students.

The University has addressed none of the other 12 demands made by the black students.

The Student Government Association at the University of Massachusetts has passed the motion to openly support the demands of the Black Student Union at the University of Mississippi.

The SGA further resolved that the University of Mississippi administration should take all actions within its power to stop the aforementioned and all other actions or displays that revive overt racist trappings of the confederacy or otherwise discriminate against blacks at the University, said Robert Teixeira of the SGA.

BMCP manager to test 'Big Apple'

By JENNIFER HARDY
Collegian Staff

The General Manager of the Black Mass Communications Project, Lezlie Harrison, has decided to put her degree and BMCP on hold. Harrison will be leaving the University to attend an acting school in New York.

Harrison jolted back in her chair as she began to talk about her four year experience with BMCP. "BMCP has been in existence for 13 years. I am sure it will continue to expand after I am gone," said Harrison.

"I have been the General Manager of BMCP for a year," Harrison said. "It is a challenging position because everyone wants to know how well you can do your job."

Harrison said that BMCP has a lot to offer the students that takes advantage of it. "Students can learn about the music industry, how to be board operators and the different types of music," Harrison said. Harrison also feels that students can use the educational resources BMCP has to offer.

"The Third World students at the University are not as involved as they should be in the project," Harrison said. "There are a few students that hold the organization together and they really devote their time."

Dressed in a red jumpsuit, and smiling as she talked, Harrison said right now BMCP is working on a movie to be shown this week, titled Rockers. "We will also be working on something for Black Musician's Month in June."

Harrison mentioned that one of her main goals before she leaves BMCP is to get the WEBDuBois, a radio station in New Africa House turned into a production studio.

"This studio will be a training ground for Third World students at the University to learn editing and production techniques," Harrison said. Harrison feels she will be able to do this with the help of other individuals involved with BMCP.

"If I had to get involved with BMCP all over again I would," said Harrison. Harrison feels she personally received a lot of satisfaction being involved with BMCP, she said she learned management, radio, communications and politics. The New General Manager of BMCP will be elected by members of the project said Harrison.

Harrison's lifetime goal is to try her luck in the music industry as a singer, as well as acting professionally. Originally from New York, Harrison said she will return periodically to the University when she needs a break from the "Big Apple." Harrison said she would like to thank all the members of BMCP that devoted their time and to Delphine Quarrles, the program advisor for student activities, a special thank you.

Chicago Police; tool of racist oppression

By MANNING MARABLE
From the Grassroots

Many political observers have attempted to discern the fundamental reason for Washington's victory, that single issue which represented the cutting edge for the black electorate. Editors of the Progressive suggested that "the core issue of the campaign was poverty," noting that "one out of five Chicagoans lives below the poverty level, and thirty-five of the city's seventy-five neighborhoods are run down almost beyond redemption." The morning after primary day, the media simplistically portrayed Washington's victory as an example of naked racial conflict. Any analysis of Chicago race relations, and the subsequent political behavior of blacks, however, must begin with an appreciation for the oppressive role of the police force as the weapon of both corporations and white ethnic leaders in the perpetuation of nonwhite subservience.

Early in her term of office, Byrne infuriated blacks by skipping over Sam Nolan, a black assistant police chief, in favor of naming a white reactionary, Richard J. Brzeczek, as police chief.

Throughout 1981 and 1982 a series of blatant police attacks escalated across the black community. Perhaps the worst instances of police brutality occured in the aftermath of the February 9, 1982 shooting of two white patrolmen by two blacks.

For several weeks, the police made hundreds of illegal house-to-house searches within the black community physically and verbally abusing residents, and randomly destroying blacks' personal property. A number of these unconstitutional attacks by the police have been documented by the publication, Racially Motivated Random Violence.

On the night of February 12, 1982, two black men, John Marsh, a small lounge owner and Madison L. Brown, a city inspector, were both "verbally and physically abused as well as arrested by eight white Chicago police officers for reasons unknown to anyone in the lounge."

The next day, Marshall Covington, a 57-year old black manager of a drugs and liqour store was accosted by police without cause. "The officers refused to check his identification, though it was offered, but instead handcuffed and forced him into the police car." While handcuffed, police brutally struck Covington in the back with a night stick. "Covington was not informed of any charges against him," yet bond for his release was set at $1,000.

Police brutality incidents increased dramatically in subsequent months. On May 23, 1982, a half dozen plainclothes police raided one black family's apartment, supposedly on a drug raid. Without producing any identification or a search warrant, they proceeded to ransack the apartment. One black man with his arm in a cast was restrained as a police officer "tried to break the cast with a crowbar." One occupant, 20 year old Louis Brown was severely beaten and suffered a ruptured pancreas. Brown was held in jail and denied medical attention for five hours.

Seven black civil rights activists were beaten and arrested by police at a Chicago Housing Authority meeting on August 10. Days later, a 24 year old black man, Vernard Williams, was shot in the head by an off-duty policeman in a Chicago grocery store during a fight. Williams died within minutes, and the officer stated that his gun went off accidentally.

Even the racist violence against black citizens in Chicago pales by comparison to the reported racist incidents which occur in suburban, all-white neighborhoods. Cicero is a prime example of an American version of apartheid. Only 74 blacks live in the city, which has a population of 61,200. Not a single municipal worker in the town, out of a total workforce of 400, is black. Blacks are not allowed to attend Cicero's public schools.

In February, 1982, when a black businessman rented an apartment within the city limits, his automobile was firebombed and damaged on three occasions. Complaining to local police, he was promptly arrested for disorderly conduct. On August 6, 1982, three young black men driving through Cicero at about 8:00 p.m. were stopped by white police officers, guns drawn.

Flashy but pointless

FLASHDANCE
Directed by Adrian Lyne
Hampshire 4

By NELLIE SCIUTTO
Collegian Staff

Pittsburgh is the setting for Flashdance — a story about dreams and aspirations. Scenes of steelmills and blue - collar bars open the film and are contrasted with fantastical dance numbers. The transitions are somewhat unrealistic. Drunken laborers go out for an evening with the boys at a bar called "Mawby's" and their entertainment is provided by flashy production numbers with professional dancers. One of these dancers is Jennifer Beals as Alex, a welder who aspires to become a real dancer.

The dancing in Flashdance is basically improvisation. It is not ballet or jazz; it is flashdancing. A young boy is shown performing a street corner dance on a narrow road. Alex and her closest friend, Jeannie (played by Sunny Johnson), run through the streets of Pittsburgh to music. However, it is only when there is music and no acting that any of this movie's attempt to portray the desire to realize one's dreams is ever convincing. Once anyone speaks, that intensity is lost. Although the dance scenes are impressive, the plot is ambiguous and predictable.

Alex falls in love with her boss, who shares his experience and power to help her reach her goal - to audition successfully for The Pittsburgh Ballet. The film's other characters don't fare as well. Alex's friend Jeannie, who also works at "Mawby's", fails to become the ice champion she wishes to be. Ritchie (Kyle Heffner),the cook at "Mawby's", never becomes a comedian (fortunately). Alex's mentor, an elderly former Broadway star, dies after giving her memories to Alex. This sums up the simplistic plot. The ending is predictable.

There are redeeming scenes in Flashdance that shine through the monotony. Nothing is more encouraging than watching a determined person fulfill their dreams, at whatever cost. Alex is an independent eighteen year old who lives alone, and works in a steelmill to support herself while dancing. Dancing is her profession from the start because that is what sustains her. Her energy is concentrated in dance. However, that profession is stagnant because she goes unnoticed until she gets help from a friend. Nick Hurley, (Michael Nouri), her boss, makes a call to get Alex an audition for the dance company. Alex reluctantly accepts this once in a life-time chance. Again, it is slightly unrealistic that she stuns the judges at her audition without ever having taken a dance class in her life.

Flashdance marks Jennifer Beal's acting debut. Michael Nouri and Lilia Skala are the only previously established actors in the film. The less - experienced are recognizable. It is also somewhat dissappointing to learn that some of the dance scenes are not actually performed by Beals; but rather a double.

Flashdance is worthwhile for its dancing and photography. Or to see a film that, for once, has a dream that is fulfilled; a happy ending. The acting and the movie as a whole, though, is very mediocre.

Yale freshman Jennifer Beals plays Alex, a welder with dreams, in Flashdance.

Clive Dawkins gives an "announcement of the banns" in front of the Student Union Thursday to promote the UMass English Department's presentation of the medieval drama Mary Magdalene. The play will be presented outdoors at 4 p.m. on May 16 just outside Memorial Hall, and is free of charge.

An early 16th century saint's play, Mary Magdalene, is unusual for its blend of moral allegory, biblical narrative, and medieval elaboration of the mission Mary undertakes to convert the heathen king of Marseilles.

The cast of over 30 players includes the roles of Satan and the Seven Deadly Sins, Jesus, a chorus of Angels, and the colorful characters of the court of Marseilles. Most are played by members of the English Department faculty as well as several students. It is suggested that you bring blankets or cushions as seating will be on the lawn outside Memorial Hall and on the steps of the Fine Arts Center.

A preview open to the public is scheduled for May 15 at 5 p.m. All are invited.

FISHER'S HORNPIPE
By Todd McEwen
Harper & Row, 256 pages, $12.95

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

Fisher's Hornpipe is a rare first novel — one that does not need to use its author's newness as an excuse. Todd McEwen, a young America living in Britain, has looked back on his native land with wonderful, if slightly desperate, insight and humor.

The action in Fisher's Hornpipe takes place in and around Boston, a city that McEwen clearly knows well and loathes with a passion. Feeling trapped in the city like "Jonas in a brick whale", McEwen's protagonist, William Fisher, is trying, not very successfully, to settle his post-collegiate life. The novelty of Fisher's job, Newbury Street apartment, and law-school girlfriend has worn quickly, like cheap silverplate, and he is left with a bare (and unbearable) existence.

A fall suffered on the ice of Walden pond splits Fisher's head open, after which begins an incredible (but, to McEwen's credit, usually believable) week, peopled with overzealous firemen, wheezing "Hahvud" Clubbers, and a horny librarian from Westport, Connecticut. One is never sure if Fisher's injury initiated his "madness," or whether it just gives him a long-awaited excuse. As Fisher says, "We are all judged by our wounds." In any case, a rousingly surreal chain of events drags Fisher et al through the bowels of Boston and Cambridge, to a refuge of what seem to be ex-Happy Valley people in Concord called the Fruitlands, and along railroad tracks to Rhode Island. In Fisher's Hornpipe, the fantastic and the metaphorical bump up against pretensions singularly Bostonian. In a moment of almost lyric absurdity, we see the "Hahvud" Club massing with the Boston City Police against a group of emancipated bums and vagrants (led by Our Hero) who are looting and pillaging Quincy Market (yeah!) on Christmas Eve. Not exactly reality, but instead reality taken a step further by a wounded man.

McEwen clearly exorcised many of his own strong feelings in Fisher's Hornpipe. But despite his personal connections with the narrative, McEwen manages to remain in control of his characters, and thus avoids the rambling nature characteristic of many such novels. The publishing of Fisher's Hornpipe is a double blessing — a wonderful new book, and a young author worth watching.

ALL WHITE JURY
THE OUTPATIENTS
DEEP WOUND
PANIXQUAD
PUBLIC DISTURBANCE
Saturday, May 7
Senior Citizen Hall,
Burlington, Vermont

By CATH E. TRIX
Collegian Correspondent

On Saturday, May 7, local hardcore punk bands All White Jury, the Outpatients, and Deep Wound joined Burlington bands Panixquad, and Public Disturbance at the Senior Citizen's Hall in Bermont. Although the bands played to a very small crowd, it was obvious to those who came from Massachusetts that the hardcore scene in Vermont is growing slowly but surely. All three Western Mass. bands are fairly well established; All White Jury and the Outpatients have tapes out for sale at Main Street Records in Northampton. All White Jury put on a really good show, although I've seen them do better sets. This band keeps getting better, and their improvements are audible. All four members have excellent stage presence, and appear to really love performing. Due to some technical problems, Pat Emmett (drums) lost the use of his bass drum several times, but the rest of the band, Simon (vocals), Mike (guitar) and Scott P. (bass), covered this up well. "Apathetic Society," "Phi Kappa Wanker" and "I'm a Jock" reflect the band members' own experiences and perceptions of college life; Simon and Scott both attend UMass. Because of limited rehearsal time (Pat attends a boarding school), the band has not been able to practice as much as they'd like — I hope that they stick together and reunite after the break, 'cause they're a really fun band to see.

The Outpatients were hot! They are, in my opinion, the best band in the Valley. They're a fast, tight trio, who work incredibly well together, both on and off of the stage. Songs like "Fight," "T.V. Violence" and "Balloon Head" were not only my personal favorites, bute were well liked by the enthusiastic audience. The trio is made up of Vis (on "the Scoop," a guitar he made himself, and lead vocals), Scott H. (bass — also plays for Deep Wound), and Mike (drums). Their basement tape was chosen by Maximum Rock and Roll (a national magazine) as one of the top ten new recordings released last month, however, the tape does not do them justice. One must see them live to fully appreciate the high energy this band puts out. The Outpatients can be seen at the Rock Against Reagan Rally, along with may other types of bands, on Thursday, May 19, at the Metawampee Lawn (behind the Hatch).

Deep Wound, who have just recently finished recording at Radio Beat Studios in Boston, were excellent. Their heavy metal influence is obvious, even to the untrained ear. The band is composed of Charley (vocals), Scott H. (bass), Lou (guitar), and "J" (drums). The band is both fast and versatile, as was proven by their all around switching of instruments. Charley's antics on stage are both amusing and he has a great rapport with the audience. Their set was briefly interrupted when "J" felt the need to trash his drum set, but the band was quick in their recovery. Hopefully this band will be able to record on vinyl soon — I think that they can do amazing things in the studio, as was already proven by the great quality of their demo tape. My personal favorite in the bands repetoire is their banner song, "Deep Wound," probably becausw the band really goes all out on this one.

All three bands, plus Cruxifix from San Fransisco and S.S. Decontrol and D.Y.S. from Boston, can be seen this Saturday, May 14 at the Guiding Star Grange, 401 Chapman Street in Greenfield. The all ages show begins at 1:00 p.m., so show your support by checking it out. Your support is needed, as was proven to us who visited in Vermont. The people who put on this show did not even break even for the hall rental. Much of the money comes out of people's personal funds — that's how important it is to them. The time and effort spent on trying to unite people is great. I really don't think that people realize how dedicated these bands, their fans, and the members of the hardcore movement are. So check it out — don't go on anyones else's word on what the scene is about; see for yourself.

Mail Art is an underground art movement. It consists of an international network of artists who strive to communicate with each other via the postal system. Since it is linked with the use of the postal system, it therefore deals with all aspects of life. It plays on mail, economics, art elitists, institutions, etc.

Ray Johnson started this network of artists when he founded "The New York Correspondence School" in the early sixties. The school's name was coined by E.M. Plunkett, a mail artist and art historian from New York.

If Johnson came in contact with a person whose lifestyle he liked, he would put that person on his mailing list. The individual would then receive letters, postcards, or packages. Every mailing has a meaning, and most of the time, in order for the person to understand the contents, he would have to refer back to something Johnson and he conversed about at one time.

It wasn't long before a whole circuit of artists participated in the network. These people really enjoyed Mail Art because it allowed them to express themselves without feeling inhibited by public scrutiny. It was also a great remedy for lack of communication among artists. Mail Art provided a language that could be understood by artists all over the world.

Mail Art is allied with Conceptual Art which stresses process over product. A major group who became involved with this philosophy in the late sixties and early seventies was the Fluxus group. Among those were George Macuinas, Ken Friedman, and Yoko Ono. They sought to create accessible art at a low cost. Mail Art is also a spin off of Dadaism, Neo-Dada, and Neo-Realism.

Artists enjoy incorporating their own ideas and eccentrities into their Mail Art. A popular method is the use of stamps, and rubber stamps.

G.A. Cavellini, Italy's best known and best liked Mail Artist is especially known for the stamps he creates. He often couples himself with great modern masters on his stamps. Some are made in watercolor, others in traditional printing methods.

In his studio, mail artist Steve Random of Greenfield has boxes of rubber stamps that he either carved himself, or obtained in some other way. He also has a diverse stamp collection from all over the world; some postmarked, some not. Sometimes he'll instruct that a piece be mailed 20 or 30 times before it is sent back to him. In that case, the envelope is covered with stamps and various decorations.

Many artists produce their own publications, such as magazines and newsletters. These are great collectibles. The contents include collages, tidbits of info about the artist or notices of upcoming events in the Mail Art network. If you're not on his mailing list, you can purchase Carlo Pittore's latest issue of ME at St. Mark's Book Store in Grenwich Village, right near his gallery. As well as being full of expressionistic creations, it describes the art exhibit InterDada '84, which will be held in San Fransisco.

There are many innovations involved in a mail artist's world. Anything goes. Marcel Duchamp, an artist many viewed as one of this generation's geniuses said, "The artist of the future will go underground." He also gave two bits of advice. The first is, "have fun, if not you'll bore us," and "a technique can be learned, but you cannot learn to have real creativity."

Mail Art thrives today because those involved choose to abide by the four unwritten rules. They are: no jury, no fees, no returns, and everything must be shown. Therefore, if there is to be a Mail Art exhibit, of which there are many, (Random hopes to have one at the University Gallery in the near future) everything that is sent in must be shown whether the exhibitor likes the piece or not. The exhibitor also cannot return the piece to the sender. Therefore, most Mail Artists have been in 200-300 shows.

The artist's work is also relieved of public jurying from a critic, who quite possibly doesn't understand the work to begin with. Mail artists are trying to avoid conforming to public modes of the art circuit. When jurying is involved, and fees paid, there is competition. Therefore, the artist feels he has to transform his right to freedom of expression to traditional modes.

As long as there exists the need for humans to communicate freely with each other, there will always exist a network such as Mail Art.

Nona Hendryx will be featured in tomorrow's UPC Mystery Series by the Pond. Performances will begin at noon tomorrow and 11 a.m. Sunday. Tomorrow's show will also feature Melba Moore and Roy Buchanan. Remember, no bottles, cans or containers will be allowed. For further information, call 545-2892.

Intramural softball season down to the finals

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

After a week of what can best be described as unusual weather, yesterday was finally nice enough for the men's intramural softball semifinals.

The first game featured the Plate against the Clinic. The teams started to play on Wednesday, but the rains came in the fourth inning. The game, however, did start up where it left off, with the Plate leading 2-0. Games consist of only five innings so the Plate needed only three outs, but it wasn't easy.

After the Plate batted in the bottom of the fourth, the Clinic pushed across a run with two outs. With the tying run on third base, pitcher and captain Tom Murphy clinched the win for the Plate with a groundout.

The Plate scored in the second on a Dave Fiorini sacrifice fly and in the third on a bases loaded single by Mark Morgan.

"We played good defense down the stretch," said Murphy, who went the distance for the victory. The plate is now 10-0 and will face BKO in the finals on Monday.

BKO, also rained out on Wednesday, wiped the slate clean and started all over against Dynasty. Not even Blake Carrington could save this Dynasty team, as BKO jumped out to a 4-0 lead early in the game.

Jack Berry and Rocky Bressar drove in runs for BKO in the first inning, and a Naki Jauregui double and Paul Gentili single accounted for two more in the third.

Dynasty threatened in the bottom half of the third, but hit into a double play to squash the rally. BKO, meanwhile, added two more runs off losing pitcher Matt Hockman in the fifth. Brian Sullivan and Bressiar knocked in the runs for BKO to clinch the victory.

Jategui led BKO with three hits and three runs scored and left fielder Bruce Stanus added two hits and two runs scored. Robert Weinberg was the winning pitcher, shutting out Dynasty by a score of 6-0.

"We are peaking at the right time," said captain Gentili. "We will be ready for the Plate."

Golf season roundup

By DAVID WOOD
Collegian Correspondent

The 1983 version of the University of Massachusetts men's golf team suffered through a very frustrating season. The competition was tough and the bad weather in the spring were the teams biggest foes.

"It seemed like every time that we had a match, the weather was terrible," said John Couig, a senior and also the team captain.

The opening match of the season was played against Boston College and Holy Cross and the weather was horrible.

"The wind was blowing about forty miles an hour and it was raining pretty hard", Couig said.

Practice was another area that the weather hurt the team. Hickory Ridge golf course, where the team plays its home matches and also practices was closed for most of the spring. The course was flooded with water from so much rain. This meant that the team had nowhere to practice and often went a week without practicing."

"Due to the weather our practice time was severely hampered. We had to pay greens fees to play on other courses in the area," said sophomore Tyler Shearer.

Most of the teams that UMass played against were very strong and tough to beat even when the team played its best.

"At the Salem State tournament, we played very well but the competition was just too strong", said freshman Brian Fitzgerald.

Considering that the winning player was under par and that Massachusetts Amateur champion Jim Hallet was in the field, one can get an idea of just what Fitzgerald meant.

Through all of this the future looks bright for the UMass golf team. Three of the starters on the team were freshmen, one was a sophomore and the other was a senior.

Shearer was the number five player and he is a sophomore from Amherst, Ma. At four was Bill Meade,a freshman who also is from Amherst. Alan Vorce, a freshman from Marlboro, Ma., played number three. The second spot was held by freshman Fitzgerald from Longmeadow, Ma.

"Brian will become a very good player and he was also low scorer on the team for the season." said Couig the number one player and team captain from Pittsfield, Ma. Couig is a first semester senior and will be playing again this fall.

Perhaps the lowlight of the season was the team performance at the New England championships, won by Holy Cross.

"It was a very tough time, we had not practiced in a week and everyone was sick. Alan, Tyler and myself all had the flu." Couig remarked. The team did not play well and finished far behind the winners.

The highlight of the season was the team's final match of the year against AIC, at Longmeadow golf club. The team scored very well and was led by Couig with a 78 on the championship course.

"The AIC match was definitely the high point of the season. We really played well and beat them easily", said Alan Vorce, who had an 81 that day.

The spring of '83 was tough time for the UMass golf team but team members feel that it was a good learning experience.

"This summer we are all going to practice very hard. The freshmen on the team should really improve and next fall we will be a tough team to beat", Couig warned.

Good luck to them and look out Jack Nicklaus!

NCAA draw

The University of Rhode Island,the 1983 NCAA Northeast representative in the softball national championships, drew the University of California at Los Angeles (more commonly known as UCLA) as their first round opponent.

From the frying pan (with Massachusetts and Rutgers) and into the fire go the Rams. URI opens the best two-of-three series today in Kingston. The second game is scheduled for Saturday and a third, if necessary, will also be on Saturday.

The results will be interesting to see. UCLA is 35-5 and URI is 26-11.

— GERRY deSIMAS

Swimming proves to be a challenge for the class

Last February, Richie couldn't do one lap in the Curry Hicks Pool. Neither could half of the class that was with him for that matter.

But, that didn't stop him. He was going to learn to swim well and with some endurance. Pretty lofty goals in the dead of February.

Gerry de Simas

Swimming is not the type of thing that a lot of people do in the cold winter months. It's cold out and no matter what the thermometer says in the pool, the water is cold too.

Richie didn't complain. He took those cold showers before entering the pool before each class (Curry Hicks does not seem to have too much hot water these days). He wanted to swim as much as he could so he could pass the swimming test when he entered the Navy after his June graduation.

In swimming class, Richie and the class learned a lot. They learned the crawl and Richie learned how to keep his legs straight.

The class mastered the backstroke, sidestroke and learned the breastroke as February turned into March and Richie's endurance got better.

Then the laps started. The instructor wanted the class to be swimming ¼ mile by the end of the semester. The class was far from that goal in March.

Richie swam lap after lap, crawl, side and breastroke. The class swam, too and by April, it was time for five minute swims.

Richie had a hard time, but he finished and for the rest of the month, Richie and the class swam more laps, did five minute swims, and played water polo every once in a while.

May came and it was time to swim the ¼ mile – 18 laps. Richie didn't make it the first time. It was the only time he didn't make it.

Now, Richie swims 18 laps at least three times a week. He's trying to swim at more than four laps crawl now. He keeps setting goals for himself.

First, he wanted to make it. He did it. He wanted to swim the first three laps crawl. He did that, too. He wanted to stay off his back during the 18 laps. He did it.

Richie, just like everyone else in the intermediate swim class has endurance and can swim at least 18 laps, a ¼ mile.

And it all started one cold morning in February.

UMass defeats UConn in playoffs

Comeau and Emerson star, Minutemen to play tonight

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

PAWTUCKET, R.I. — The University of Massachusetts baseball team, behind the power hitting of Todd Comeau and the stellar pitching of Bruce Emerson, defeated the University of Connecticut 8-7 yesterday in the first game of the ECAC playoffs.

The key offensive performance of the game was turned in by Comeau, who had three hits, including a home run, and drove in five runs.

Starting pitcher Emerson had a fine game himself, giving up only one run in six innings while knocking in a run.

UMass started the scoring in the bottom of the second inning when Dean Bennett, after Andy Connors and Todd Ezold singled and Steve Messina walked to load the bases, hit a sacrifice fly to score Connors. Comeau knocked in a run in the inning with a single. By the end of the second the Minutemen led 3-0.

Emerson blanked UConn until the fifth, when the Huskies broke through for a run. In the bottom of the inning, though, UMass exploded.

With two outs, Messina, Bennett, and Emerson hit consecutive singles to score a run and then Comeau came up. Comeau launched a three-run homer and suddenly the Minutemen had a 7-1 lead.

In the top of the seventh, with Scott Foster now pitching for UMass, UConn struck for two runs. Another Comeau RBI in the bottom of the inning gave the Minutemen a 8-3 advantage.

Things got hairy for UMass in the eighth as Foster and Matt Subocz were ineffective on the mound and the Huskies scored four to make it a one-run game.

However, Tony Presnal was able to hold UConn scoreless for the remainder of the game to pick up the save and give Emerson the victory.

The 8-7 triumph leaves UMass in good shape as they prepare to meet the winner of the University of Maine-Providence College match-up, which stood at 1-1 at press time.

UMass will be playing at 8 tonight, once again at McCoy Stadium in Pawtucket.

The scheduled Minuteman starting pitcher is Bob Kostro, who was 4-4 over the regular season.

Against Maine and PC, UMass had a combined record of 0-3, but one of the losses was in extra-innings and the other was a one-run heartbreaker.

Maine is considered to be the better team, but no matter who they face, the Minutemen simply have to win two of their next three games to advance to the NCAA Northeast Regionals.

Ever since midseason, when the Minutemen began to mesh as a team and won 14 of 17 during one stretch, this team has been the hottest in the northeast and appears good enough to go as far as the College World Series. but first things first — the game tonight in Pawtucket.

Garber's Gorillas try to win one for the Mrs.

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The up and down topsy turvy homelife of Mary Jane Garber comes to a close, (at least for this season) tomorrow when the Gorillas wind up the 1983 edition of Massachusetts lacrosse at the University of New Hampshire.

Mary Jane is the wife of head coach Dick Garber, whose team has struggled to a 5 - 9 record, the first losing season the Garber household has had to endure since 1965.

Dick, the husband, knows that his attitude is affected when the team fails to come up with victories.

"I think losing is tougher on her," he said. "After a loss I'm a real grouch around the house but, she's very understanding and very tolerant.

"Fortunately," Dick added, "over the years, there haven't been that many losses."

But, before he can worry about his demeanor around the house, Dick, the coach, must concentrate on getting his troops ready for a UNH team that is eyeing a potential berth in the NCAA playoffs.

"UNH is 9 - 3 right now and they feel that if they can beat us they can get that number 8 spot in the rankings," said Garber. (The top eight teams are invited to participate in post - season play.)

"They're going to be ready," Garber said, "and we're going up to win."

The big question will be the team's mental attitude going into a game with an inspired team capable of top notch lacrosse. It would be all too easy for the team to travel to Durham without their killer instinct packed someplace on the bus. Garber himself isn't even sure if the squad will rise to the occasion.

"I wish I knew," he said. "Those guys are like a Ouija Board."

So what this final appearance for the toughluck Gorillas amounts to is a test of competitive spirit, of intestinal fortitude.

Regardless of the result of the game, though, the season will wind down to an end. Garber, even while facing his first losing season in 18 years, still wishes that it weren't over.

"I wish we had a few more games so we could even out the record," he said.

Optimism from the coach and a bit of wisdom from his wife.

"They (the players) should have a good time," Mary Jane Garber said.

Any Gorilla fans who wish to trek to New Hampshire for the game are welcome. Mary Jane Garber is going. What Saturday night will be like at her home may very well depend on the contest's outcome.

The national champion UMass women's lacrosse team plays Harvard 2 p.m. Saturday at NOPE. The winner advances to the NCAA quarter-finals.

Gazelles face Harvard in do or die match

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ

Everything will be on the line this Saturday afternoon at 2:00 p.m. on upper NOPE field as the defending national champion University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team takes on cross - state rival Harvard University in the quarterfinals of the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) playoffs.

Harvard made it to the quarterfinals by defeating Norhtwestern University on Wednesday by a score of 9 - 4 in the preliminary round of the playoffs. The Gazelles, who were seeded fourth in the tournament, drew a first round bye.

In the only previous match between these two teams this season, UMass defeated Harvard by a close 7 - 6 margin at NOPE, in a hard - fought, exciting match. Saturday's game promised to be another great one.

"It should be a good game. We know what to expect and that we will be tested. You have to know your opponent and we know Harvard. We will have to play a great game of lacrosse in order to win," said coach Pam Hixon.

The stickwomen have a few nagging injuries, but everybody will help and the team will get excited about playing again.

"Harvard is good and fast. They pass well and take a lot of shots. Our defense must be sharp, like in the first game. I think Harvard's defense is weak," commented Hixon.

"Offensively we must capitalize on every good opportunity. We will go with the best people and the same game plan," added Hixon.

"Once you get this far in the playoffs, no matter who you play, they will be good. I would rather play someone we don't know, because that's where we have the advantage. If we win Saturday, I will be confident about our chances the rest of the way," said Hixon.

This is a do or die match, and the winner of these quarterfinals will go to the NCAA's Final Four, which will take place next weekend at the University of Pennsylvania.

"It should be a fast, hard - fought game. Both teams will be physical. We will prepare for the opposition and do the best we can. Our biggest advantage will be the home field, and support from the fans would give us an edge," said Hixon.

Since it is an NCAA playoff game, there will be an admission charge of $2 for students and $3 for adults. Come out Saturday and support your defending champions in their quest for another title and see an exciting, tough lacrosse game.

Southwest Evacuation a possibility

Steamline rupture could leave students in cold

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students living in the Southwest Residential area may find themselves homeless this coming winter if the badly corroded steam line leading to that dormitory cluster fails to operate.

Director of Housing Services Joseph A. Zannini said an evacuation plan has been formulated in the event a steam line catastrophy occurs when the temperature is below freezing.

The steam line, which has a life expectancy of 20 years is 18 years old according to Physical Plant officials, and is so badly corroded that failure could happen at any time.

Dormitory pipes will freeze rendering the buildings completely useless if they are not drained within 24 hours of a failure, Anthony Fusco, head of the Amherst Maintenance Division of Physical Plant said.

"All we are saying is the line is in poor condition. Whether we have a series of multiple leaks on the line depends on how cold it is. It doesn't take long before a building is at freezing temperature," Hans Vanderleeden, Physical Plant design head, said.

Fusco said the Physical Plant does not have adequate manpower to drain the pipes of the 18 Southwest buildings that would be affected.

"When it comes to that point we'll ask what buildings they want to sacrifice and what buildings they want to keep," Fusco said.

Zannini, Fusco and Vanderleeden all said they had no way to predict the chances of a failure in the steam line.

Towers and high occupancy lowrises will be priority buildings to save if a steam line failure occurs, Zannini said. The dining commons and smaller dormitories will be on a lower priority, he said.

Students removed from buildings would be placed in lounges and other vacant areas of dormitories on the east side of campus for what could end up being "an indefinite period of time," Zannini said of his evacuation plan.

Current plans for major repair and replacement of steam lines will depend on capital outlay money in next year's state budget, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson said. $400,000 for emergency repairs is immediately necessary, he said.

"I think we'll get it. When you get to that level (of a problem) I think the legislature will come through with the money. We're pushing for 1984 (funding for replacement) but we have to have an emergency system by 1984," Madson said.

Madson said Amherst legislators Rep. Jim Collins and Sen. John Olver are in the process of pushing for nearly $4 million in capital outlay funds for next year's budget to address the problem.

Replacement plans include either a new steam line, or a low temperature line which would provide 250 degree water to the building for heat rather than the current system where steam is converted to water.

The present lines providing heat to Southwest are anywhere from 6 to 20 feet below ground depending on the location and are 12 inches in diameter with heavy steel casing and insulation, Vanderleeden said.

"We have seen it (the problem) coming on for a couple of years already," Vanderleeden said. "It (a failure) has not happened in the past and we keep our fingers crossed that it won't happen in the future," he said.

Fusco said the line can still operate with its present leaks if the pressure remains constant. He said the plan for the immediate future is just to patch and repair until construction of a replacement line begins.

But despite patchwork repairs, "the risk for catastrophic failure in the high pressure steam line . . . is still there," Fusco said.

If a failure were to happen during warm weather it would result in at least the inconvenience of having no hot water for showers, Zannini said.

But a failure during the cold winter months would present a more serious problem.

"It would take two days to fix the line and a considerably longer time to fix the buildings," Zannini said.

We would have to consider sending people home. To me just thinking about it is enough to give me heartburn. I'm concerned about it," he said.

Gerald T. O'Neil, director of public safety at UMass compared the possibility of steam line failure to the water crisis in September, 1980 when all on campus students were sent home for four days.

"It would be an awesome problem to deal with," O'Neil said. But he added that word got out quickly for the evacuation during the water crisis.

"We basically have not been contacted. To my knowledge we have not had to draw up evacuation plans for it," O'Neil said.

Threats don't deter marchers in local rally for gay rights

By DAVID B. MINER
Collegian Staff

More than 1,000 people gathered Saturday to protest gay oppression at Northampton's Bridge Street School for the second annual gay rights march and rally.

Despite threats of violence, organizers said nearly four times as many participants turned out this year compared to last year's rally.

"The fact that it is a nice day helped make the turnout better, but threats of violence played a big part in making people realize they have to take a stand," Smith College student Linda McRoy, an organizer of the march said.

"There is no question that the threats of violence added to the turn-out," University of Massachusetts Peoples Gay Alliance (PGA) Treasurer Kevin George said. "It (threats) made people more aware."

The march, which was led by five "peacekeepers" who linked arms across each others' shoulders, began on Main Street, stretching along King Street to North Street.

When the marchers reached downtown Northampton's Pulaski Park, they were met by protestors who held signs that read "God made Adam for Eve, not Steve" and "God Judged Sodom and Gomorrah — Northampton next?"

"It's ungodly," protestor Rev. Richard Paasch said. Paasch, a member of the National Organization Against Homosexuality (NOAH), said he feared Northampton would become "another San Francisco."

"Gays in San Francisco have taken over that city," Paasch said. "There's 150,000 of them and it's a city of 750,000 people."

Several marchers began to chant "We're going to beat, beat, beat, the right attack," and "Gays, straights, blacks, whites — all unite to fight the right," after a pastor offered the crowd a booklet entitled "Hope for the homosexual."

The only reported violence took place when a spectator allegedly threw an empty tonic can that struck another spectator in a wheelchair. Police removed the suspect from the scene. The man hit by the can was not injured. NOAH founder John Crawford said he believes the issue of homosexuality will play an important role in upcoming elections.

"I did not see any elected public official march," Crawford said. "I hope it's for their political well-being that they did not march."

A spokesman for the peace movement at the rally said homosexuals will support candidates who will fight gay oppression.

"My organization has a computerized list of 5,000 names," he said. "We support the gay movement. Together we will be a force in coming elections."

Saturday's rally capped off a week of gay awareness and gay pride events sponsored on campus by the UMass People's Gay Alliance.

The group sponsored a dance on Friday night and a lecture by gay Boston City Council candidate David Gearhart. Workshops on topics such as gay men's health issues were also presented.

PLO asked to wage war on US

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) - Guerrilla chief Yasser Arafat, trying to rally his forces against the Israeli-Lebanese troop withdrawal pact, called on the Palestine Liberation Organization yesterday to wage war against Israel and the United States.

"An effective war is the only way to redraw the political map of the Middle East," Arafat told leaders of his guerrilla faction, Fatah, in a speech reported by the PLO news agency WAFA.

"The way out of this present deadlock is taking a decision to wage war to change the balance of power," he said, exhorting his followers to battle the "Zionist-American enemy."

While Arafat met with Fatah leaders, PLO sources opposed to his policies said dissent was growing among Palestinian guerrillas in eastern Lebanon and that some were disobeying orders from the Fatah faction.

In Netanya, Israel, negotiatiors reached an agreement on the text of the Israeli-Lebanese accord, and an Israeli spokesman said the document could be signed as soon as tomorrow. The pact calls for Israel to withdraw its 25,000 troops from Lebanon when Syria and the PLO agree to pull out their troops.

Managers aware of corruption

WASHINGTON (AP) - Nearly three out of four recently retired mid-level managers of large U.S. corporations say government regulation is necessary because industry cannot police itself entirely, according to a federally funded survey released yesterday.

An overwhelming majority of those interviewed said top executives set the ethical tone for compliance with the law, and nearly three-quarters believed top management knew about corporate violations of the law either in advance or shortly thereafter.

The retired managers were strongly in favor of reporting serious worker safety violations to the government. But they also were strongly opposed to reporting price fixing, serious illegal rebates and kickbacks and illegal payments to foreign officials, the study said. Overwhelmingly, they believed employees who reported violations should be protected from dismissal.

The 117-page study, entitled "Corporate Ethics, Illegal Behavior, and Government Regulation: Views of Middle Management," was conducted by Marshall B Clinard, sociology professor emeritus at the University of Wisconsin, under a $24,000 grant issues in November 1981 by the Justice Department's National Institute of Justice.

Clinard based his findings on lengthy interviews with 64 managers who had retired within the past five years from 51 companies on Fortune magazine's listing of the 500 largest U.S. companies.

Drunken driving law imposes jail

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — State legislators unanimously approved a tough drunken driving bill that imposes a two-day jail term or 48 hours of public service for first offenders.

Members of the Assembly agreed Saturday to state Senate amendments to the bill, the final step in the state's legislative approval.

In addition to the first-offense penalties, the bill permits police to immediately seize the license of any driver who refuses to take a preliminary breath test. First offenders also could be fined $200 to $1,000 and lose driving privileges for 90 days.

Hitler diaries dealer jailed for fraud

Beck said no one else has been taken into custody in the case and that no other warrants are outstanding.

Stern, a weekly magazine based in Hamburg, had published some excerpts from the "diaries" along with the London newspaper The Sunday Times, to whom it sold serialization rights, beofe they were declared forgeries.

In a four-page statement released by his lawyer to the press on Saturday, Kujau denied allegations that he forged the diaries himslrf, claiming he was unable to read or write the old German script in which the 62 volumes were penned.

Beck said Kujau had not yet given authorities a formal statement. He was unable to shed light on the mysterious "Mr. Mirdorf" from whom Kujau told reporters he got the diaries in East Germany.

"We are investigating," he said, "but at this point we don't even know if this Mr. Mirdorf even exists."

Citizen creates own government to invalidate Congressional laws

PORTER, Texas — Mack McGee wants to do away with income taxes, birth certificates and marriage licenses.

He wants to eliminate standing armies, orphanages, police departments, paper money, licensing of doctors and lawyers, prisons, public schools, the last 16 amendments to the U.S. Constitution and every law ever passed by Congress.

"In order to save herself, America has to return to the Constitution and to God's law," says the beraded McGee. "That's all we need. The Constitution and God's Law." And down here, in an unincorporated community just north of Houston, some people are listening — with results they didn't expect.

McGee and his anti-tax comrades helped create a "government" called the Southern District of Texas Township.

Operating from a garage loft and even printing its own kind of money, the group found it went too far when it tried to haul a municipal judge into its court last week.

The judge responded — but he brought along law officers and arrest warrants, and led some leaders away in handcuffs to face felony charges of tampering with government documents.

McGee, 49, of Irving, insisting his government is as legal as any, says, "We have the jurisdiction of law and we are the just government."

The group sends documents about its mission to President Reagan, Gov. Mark White and county officials. The papers have one theme: The people in the Township are free Americans, bound only by the Constitution, and no officials have any right to do anything to them.

Reagan's coiffure criticized by bald mayor on SNL

NEW YORK - Politicians are used to being criticized and even laughed at, but few willingly put themselves in that position.

Except, of course, Mayor Edward Koch, who as the host of the late-night comedy show "Saturday Night Live" sang an off-key rendition of "New York, New York" and had a glob of sticky goop rubbed onto his bald pate.

To no one's surprise, the mayor's first words as he strode on stage were his characteristic "How'm I doing?"

He then delivered the show's opening monologue, which he began by saying he thought President Reagan was a "whacko"—another favorite Koch expression.

Among the things he said he disliked about the president was his hair and the attention he receives when he's in town.

"Every time he comes to New York I have to schlep all the way out to the airport and greet him personally . . . Koch said.

TV anchor gives speech on creativity at commencement

BOSTON - Network anchorman Dan Rather and Jamaican Prime Minister Edward Seaga both urged graduating students at Boston University yesterday to prepare themselves for a constantly changing society.

"The world you face today, I strongly believe, is wide open for creative intelligence, for thoughtful men and women who are willing to put their minds to work on the stubborn problems of modern life," Rather said at the school's 110th commencement exercises.

Rather, the anchor and managing editor of "The CBS Evening News," pointed out that society's changing perceptions on disarmament, the economy and science would present the graduates with challenges in the future.

Fire investigation proceeds after two dead in Dedham

DEDHAM, Mass — Officials asked the state fire marshal to determine the cause of a blaze that took the lives of two young Boston men who were visiting at a friend's house in Dedham.

Killed in the Saturday morning fire were Joby Ward, 21, of Boston's Hyde Park section, and Jerry Trainor, 24, of West Roxbury, officials said.

They were visiting Robert Milton, 21, who lives at the Mount Hope Street house with a roommate, James Billotti, 30. Both Billotti and Milton escaped the fire.

Deputy Fire Chief Joseph Nagle said the fire started in the kitchen area of the singlefamily house and was completely ablaze when firefighters arrived on the scene shortly after 5 a.m

City rats to die of bone disease from new poison

MADISON, Wis. - A new rat poison that causes fatal changes in the rodents' blood chemistry grew out of research into bone disease.

The compound, called "one-alpha," raises blood calcium and phosphorous levels to abnormal levels, causing rats to die of kidney and circulatory failure, University of Wisconsin-Madison biochemist Hector DeLuca, the discoverer of the new poison, said last week.

He said one-alpha could be effective in large cities, where rats have become immune to Warfarin, another poison.

UMass libraries: missing more than bricks

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: this is the first installment of a two part series which concludes tomorrow).

The main library at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst will have to expand its collection of books, periodicals, and scholarly journals or its status as a research facility will decline.

•Chancellor Joseph Duffey, the Faculty and Senate Library Committee, and library administrators all agree that the deficiency in the annual acquisition of books, periodicals (magazines and regular publications), serials (annual publications and reports), and scholarly journals can only be corrected if the Board of Regents and State legislature increase the University's budget.

•Richard J. Talbot, director of libraries, said the problem has emerged in the last few years, because of inadequate budgeting since 1971, the library's peak year.

•The Association Research Libraries, (ARL), which measures research facilities by their total number of acquisitions an expenditures, ranks UMass 81st among its 101 member institutions in the U.S. and Canada.

•The main library (Goodell and the Tower) received its best ARL rating in 1971 when it was ranked 44th.

The library is notorious for its reputation as an architectural disaster, but Talbot last week said the structural problems can be dealt with in the short term.

"Deficiencies in acquisitions is a longer term problem, however," Talbot said. "It will be with us until the system of acquiring materials changes."

"(UMass) should purchase about 20,000 books, periodicals and serials each year," Talbot said, "and then we could begin to make up the backlog."

Since the deficiency is a threat to the credibility of both the library and the University, Talbot has had little difficulty getting support for an increased acquisitions budget.

Duffey yesterday said UMass must convince the regents and the state legislature of the importance of a public research library.

"The University needs to maintain a major research library here," Duffey said. "This is particularly important because the faculty and graduate students are engaged in highly technical research.

"In the last few years the library's acquisitions have not been able to keep up," he said.

The Faculty Senate Library Committee has said UMass' reputation is declining because of its falling ARL rating, and proposed that the regents and legislature increase the library's budget.

"We are a research university and we are recognized as a research university," Talbot said, "but we must be funded like a research university if we are to maintain our status."

Professors cite lack of materials

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

Prof. Stephan B. Oates anticipated having to put countless hours of research into his study of Dr. Martin Luther King.

To trace the journey of political leaders through the Soviet Union, China and Cuba, Prof. Paul Hollar ~~ expected to read hundreds of books, magazines and government documents.

Both Oates and Hollander, who teach at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, planned to offer any new information gained through their research to students there.

But to do their work, Oates and Hollander have had to use libraries in New York, Boston or even Amherst College, because, they say, the UMass library contains a limited collection of books, journals and periodicals.

"Between going to Goodell (Library) to use the card catalog and having to go to the Tower Library to find that the book is missing or lost, I can do very limited work at the UMass library," Oates, a historian and 15 year UMass faculty member, said last week.

But the nature of Oates' research requires him to use several libraries, Richard J. Talbot, director of libraries, said last week.

"The work (Oates) undertakes requires materials from several libraries," Talbot said. "An historian of his quality does not use simply one library."

Oates, however, after publishing his book of King last year, Let the Trumpets Sound, said he could find materials for his work only about 30 percent of the time at the UMass library.

Hollander, who published his book, Political Pilgrims: Travels of Western Intellectuals to the Soviet Union, China and Cuba 1928-79, in 1981 had similar concerns.

"There are gaps in the UMass library," Hollander, a 15 year member of the sociology faculty, said last week. "I've had to use the Harvard library and the Smith College library."

Both professors agree a strong library reflects a strong faculty, and are disturbed by the quality of the UMass library.

"It's not the librarians," Oates said. "They do a fine job. It's the administrative budget cuts that hurt the library.

"These are scholarly cutbacks. Research emphasizes great teaching, and when researchers come up with new thesis', they can bring them back to the classroom."

UMass researchers study acid rain

By MIKE HOTALING
Collegian Correspondent

Because precipitation in Massachusetts last year was more acidic than in any other state in the country, the Water Resources Research Center at the University of Massachusetts has been working to measure the status of the state's water bodies and increase public awareness of the problem.

According to Dr. Paul Godfrey, Director of the Water Resources Research Center, people in Massachusetts tend to view acid rain as a problem not directly affecting them.

"Acid rain has been viewed as a problem affecting only Canada and the Adirondacks," Godfrey said.

For this reason, Godfrey recently organized the Acid Rain Monitoring (ARM) Project, a volunteer effort to monitor the effects of acid rain on bodies of water throughout Massachusetts. The project involves approximately 1,000 volunteers collecting monthly water samples from over 1,500 Massachusetts water bodies.

In the past, groups have presented evidence of acidity from tests done with litmus paper, but "litmus testing has been discounted by the scientific community because the results are inaccurate," Godfrey said.

As a result, the ARM project strives for scientifically credible data, insisting on laboratories with professional technicians and quality assurance testing. Laboratories are set up according to standards acceptable to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and the project uses the same accuracy range as the EPA, Godfrey said.

One aspect of the project is emphasizing accuracy so that their data can serve as a basis of comparison for future testing.

"If emission reduction legislation is enacted, comparisons can be made to determine if effects are substantial," Godfrey said.

The ARM project is working to increase public awareness of the issue because it is the people who can get the needed changes made, Godfrey said. If people are made aware that the problem exists in their own backyard they will get activated, and if they get activated they will let their representatives know, he said.

To aid in acid rain awareness, an acidity report is carried by 13 media sources. Each rainfall is tested by Tom Zajicek of the UMass chemistry department and the information is relayed to the media by the Water Resources Research Center.

The Water Resources Research Center is funded by the Office of Water Policy, a division of the Department of the Interior, which funds 54 centers nationwide. With the Reagan administration, however, some funding problems have arisen, Godfrey said.

"We've been around since 1965 but the last three years have been a struggle with funds being held back," he said.

Funding for the ARM project went through in January and the project was quickly organized with the first samples being collected in mid-March.

"It almost seems super-human in retrospect," Godfrey said. "I thought I'd collapse!"

The Center does not focus only on acid rain. Past projects have included the conservation project during the water shortage of 1980 and work to stop the diversion of the Connecticut river, the subject of a bill which passed through the Massachusetts Senate Wednesday.

Budget committee excludes personnel

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

As a result of an agreement between Student Government Association (SGA) leaders and the University of Massachusetts Administration, no university personnel will hold voting positions on this year's Summer Budgets Committee.

SGA Treasurer Eric Nitzsche said he has reached "a mutually agreeable compromise" with Student Activities Office (SAO) Director Randy Donant on the membership of the committee, which controls activities fees collected from Summer Session students.

Two weeks ago, Nitzsche said he would try to eliminate all University personnel from voting and non-voting positions on the board because it was "not appropriate to have paid members of the administration on student committees."

At that time, Nitzsche proposed to eliminate Donant's voting position on the committee, and eliminate two other SAO non-voting positions on the committee. The committee would be comprised of four student voting members: the SGA Budget Committee chair, an SGA co-President, the Senate Speaker, and SGA Treasurer Nitzsche, who chairs the committee.

Nitzsche's compromise proposal gives Donant, SAO Program Unit Director Irene Richards and SAO Assistant Business Manager Bob Jenal non-voting positions on the committee. A representative from the Graduate Student Senate and a student representative from the Continuing Education Office will have voting positions on the committee, in addition to the four SGA voting members.

Nitzsche called the compromise membership "a temporary agreement."

Donant said the compromise is "a positive beginning to what could have been a big problem."

"I credit Eric for his ability to bring (the compromise) through, Donant said. "It shows that things can be worked out if we approach these problems in a constructive, positive way.

"I will function with Bob Jenal and Irene Richards as resource people (on the committee)," Donant said.

Nitzsche said the graduate members were added because the Continuing Education Office collects Summer Session fees and "there's no distinction between graduates and undergraduates in Continuing Education."

Donant said the graduate student members have not been chosen yet.

"I'm going to be contacting the Continuing Education Office, and Eric will be approaching the Graduate Student Senate," he said.

The Summer Budgets Committee allocates activities fee monies paid by students taking courses during summer session. Students pay a $12 activities fee for each six-week session. Nitzsche estimated the entire budget would be "around $35,000" this year.

Summer Session begins June 6. Donant said summer activities include the "Bright Moments" jazz series, Union Program Council concerts, and a film series, as well as summer staff for some campus organizations. The money "doesn't go for preparing for the fall," Donant said.

Students can house youths

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

A Northampton social agency hopes to tap the University community for responsible single students and other persons to take in abused and emotionally disturbed adolescent foster children.

Tri-County Youth Programs of Northampton is a private institution funded mainly by the state.

"Our foster program is an ongoing thing," foster home recruiter Susan Maguire said. "It receives a fairly good amount of response but we would like to make people even more aware of it. We are constantly recruiting."

People who are rooming together in an apartment and have some extra space are eligible to sponsor a foster child as long as they realize the child is not just another roommate, Maguire said.

"Many of our kids would benefit more by living with someone single and closer to their own age, rather than with a traditional family where a lot of their problems began.

"By living with a single foster parent not too much older than themselves, they'd have someone they could look up to as well as relate to," Maguire said. "These kids need a lot of care, attention, and love."

The majority of foster children range between the ages of 15 and 16, but they can be as young as 10 and as old as 22. The program lasts for six months, or longer if the foster parent is interested, she said.

Foster parents received a sum of money each week to provide for the child's room and board as well as a small salary for the parent, Maguire said. The salary is determined by how much care the child requires.

There is frequent contact between the foster homes and Tri-County caseworkers who are always available for consultation.

"We recommend these programs to students, especially those who are interested in any type of social work as a career," Maguire said. "It's good hands on experience working with troubled adolescents."

New judiciary clerk promises action

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Judiciary elected a new clerk of courts last week who promised to make the judicial organization more active next year.

Lawrence Mestel, elected clerk of courts Thursday night, said yesterday that the University Judiciary has heard only two cases this semester.

"I don't think the University Judiciary can get any worse than it is," Mestel said. "As far as I'm concerned, all cases have a reason to be heard. If there's a case to be heard, it should be heard, if it is at all possible."

The clerk of courts is the administrative head of the University Judiciary, which reviews all Undergraduate Student Senate actions, hears all cases resulting from conflict with the Student Government Association(SGA) constitution, and also hears some cases of shoplifting at the University Store.

"The clerk handles the paperwork, schedules hearings, and facilitates the day to day operations of the judiciary," current Clerk of Courts Chris Cook said.

"It hasn't been an especially active year," said Cook, who has been chosen as student speaker at this year's commencement ceremony. Cook said the judiciary has been hearing many shoplifting cases.

"Shoplifting is actually a much more important thing we do," Cook said. "But you don't hear that much about it."

SGA leaders have criticized Cook for not being accessible enough this semester, and have said the office has not performed its function. Cook said the feeling is mutual.

"I don't attach a high priority to SGA cases," Cook said. "A lot of the time the best interests of the students aren't served by the SGA."

Mindy Ordway, chair of the Senate's Governmental Affairs Committee, said Cook has been "irresponsible."

"This semester he had five complaints," Ordway said. "Nobody could find him. They had to park themselves outside his door."

"If people have complaints, they should be recognized," Ordway said. She said she is working on changes in the SGA Judicial Policy Act that would have the judiciary elect the clerk of courts from outside the organization, through a job search process. Changes in the Act would also require the clerk to pass in a weekly "work report, as to what they've been doing all week," in return for a pay slip from the SGA Treasurer, Ordway said.

Mestel agreed that more cases have to be heard, and he promised to recruit more student judges.

Only six out of a possible 19 judges sat on the judiciary this semester, according to student judge Bill Collins. Cook said area governments have not been appointing their quota of judges.

"I will contact the area governments and get judges appointed," Mestel said. "Without judges, I can't train them, and judges can't hear cases without being trained."

Mestel said there are "only two returning judges" next year, including Collins, who was appointed by Southwest Area Government, and a new Greek Area appointee.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

A radical's road to political maturity

When I first stepped foot on the grounds of this university I was moderate to conservative and mostly apathetic. And I believe the climate at UMass was instrumental in guiding me to my present left-wing beliefs not because I was brainwashed by godless humanists, as many have accused, but because I was exposed to a variety of opinions and opened my mind to them.

Conservatism sounds reasonable to a passive individual who falls for its tone of propaganda.

Capital Punishment sounds reasonable, for why should we let a murderer live?

Rich Nangle

Defense spending sounds reasonable — why should we let the Soviets take over the world and make us all work in the cornfield for Yuri?

Pro-life anti-abortion sounds reasonable, how can we kill an unborn before it has had the chance to experience life?

And why should we tax the rich at a greater percentage than the poor? The rich work hard for their money don't they?

The problem with all these arguments and countless other examples of conservative doctrine is that they are flawed with simplistic logic fostered by ignorance. When it comes to current events, most people I come in contact with at UMass and elsewhere are appallingly ignorant.

Too many people are so wrapped up in their own little cocoons that they are unable, or worse unwilling, to try to do something about the problems that face us as a nation and a world.

If people don't stop worrying about which preppy shirt costs less and how to swindle Uncle Tex out of his real estate there will never be any political change in this country. Unless more people get involved in the fight we'll keep moving down the path of destruction we seem to have created for ourselves.

By associating love of the flag with conservative beliefs, right-wingers are able to dissuade others from leaning to the left. People ignore their consciences and support the status quo because nobody wants to do an un-American thing. What would the guys back at the lodge think?

I personally think our founding fathers would be outraged by what is happening in the United States today.

I believe it is keeping with the American spirit to oppose draft registration and preparation for war since war limits the freedom of all involved. I don't believe the Soviets are waiting for a chance to pounce on us. Soviets are people too and they don't want to die.

The Soviet Union is paranoid about the twenty million people it lost in World War II and doesn't want it to happen again. And the catastrophies that would result from a nuclear war would make all other wars look like practice games.

If people are worried about what the Soviets are doing in Afghanistan and Poland why don't they open their eyes and minds and realize that we are doing the same thing in Central America. Both examples worry me. But too many people condone the U.S. supported atrocities in other countries.

The conservative ideals of President Reagan are the conservative attitudes of the rich and other pathetic flag-waving individuals who are either too stupid or too selfish to analyze their beliefs on a large scale.

The rich are conservative because it is human nature to be selfish and protect one's wealth. Since the wealthy in this country control an obscenely disproportionate amount of the capital they are able to use it to their political advantage and snow the average person who many times is unable to keep up on the issues because he or she is too busy working all day and all week in order to pay the essential bills.

The fact that millions of people rely on the word of Pat Robertson of the 700 club and Jerry Falwell, leader of the Moral Majority and host of the weekly Old Time Gospel Hour which is seen all over the country, is a scary thought to me.

Even though Ronald Reagan is adding millions to the list of poor people in this country, the very people he's screwing continue to support him because of his nice smile, nice guy image. How stupid can people be?

Apparently people reach new heights of stupidity all the time. Whoever said "never overestimate the intelligence of the American voter?" was a dead ringer.

On this campus there are actually students who support the Solomon Amendment which, although temporarily retracted, would deny financial aid to students who cannot prove they have registered for the draft. People claim we are only in a peacetime registration, but aren't the parallels of the arms buildup, denunciation of all Soviet Arms control proposals, and claims that nuclear freeze advocates have been duped by communists obvious?

When one considers the actions and philosophies of President Reagan it is easy to see why we have draft registration during "peacetime."

As with other morally incorrect laws, what would have happened if more than a few hundred thousand people decided not to register? Better yet, what if they held a war and nobody came?

This is my last column for the Collegian as a student which will probably please the anti-progressive and visionless people who read this paper. But hopefully others will carry the crusade to even greater heights. As long as we have a campus newspaper there will be a liberal slant since people to the left, in my experience, tend to be more creative and spontaneous than those on the right.

While I'm on the subject, I want to comment on those who accuse me of being a nostalgia laden '60s radical. '60s radicals are those who are influenced by the Grateful Dead. Since I'm influenced by the Clash and Dead Kennedys I consider myself an '80s radical.

Oh and don't forget seniors, to stand up and turn your back on Ed King when he rises to accept his honorary degree at Commencement. But remember to do it with dignity. We have more of that than King. His conservative philosophy drove him to turn his back on UMass and spit on its faces. We owe King Edward the same treatment he gave us.

Rich Nangle ('83) was a Collegian columnist

Rough edges finally smooth

Most things in life get off to a rough start. Babies don't look thrilled when they open their eyes for the first time. I didn't look calm when I opened my physics text for the first time. And my first phone bill didn't tickle either. Sometimes I think my entire educational experience got off to a rocky start. I have one particularly vivid memory from the third grade that has stayed with me throughout my academic career. Unaccustomed as I was to wearing nametags, I copied my best friend's name onto my own. Mrs. Perlman was not impressed, nor was she amused. Suddenly, I was very anxious to get on with my education elsewhere.

Lise Zeiger

Even my entrance to this university was not a graceful one. Three Long Islanders made it to the famed exit 19 on the Interstate in just under two hours. Leslie wasn't a bad driver, she just had trouble with the concept of state lines. We were still in Connecticut, with no sign of Amherst for another hour. From the back seat of the car, I began to realize that getting an education, let alone finding it, wasn't going to be a simple matter.

But that was four years and three majors ago. From a student number and a mailbox combination to a confident scholar who has found her niche within the university. Slowly, the rough edges started smoothing out. Confusion developed into a complicated pattern, which became routine with a little practice. Even the monstrous array of buildings became recognizable from any angle. After four years, the struggle became an effortless glide. But simplicity leads to boredom: a glowing signal that it's time to move on.

There are always new challenges to find after the old ones have been conquered. Think back to that first midnight excursion to the maze. We had been sloshing around the same corner for hours, as the sun was slowly making its grand entrance over the sewage treatment plant. That thing used to seem like such a nightmare. But now we can plow through it like OJ Simpson hurtling through Logan. Let's face it, it's time to learn our way through a new maze.

The novelty of our surroundings has worn off. That quaint little town has lost some of its charm. As a matter of fact, it's getting a little tacky after four years of traipsing through it. One begins to fantasize of Madison Avenue as the bus plows its way up North Pleasant Street. If the only thing you don't already know about this town is how to score one million points playing Defender, it's time to start looking for fresh turf.

After a few years, some events start to feel like they've seen better days. After a semester of living off-campus, even a dorm party can be an empty experience. The feeling is somewhat akin to walking into a stranger's living room in the middle of the Superbowl. No one cares to find out who you are, they just want to know if you brought any beer. It isn't easy to talk about the old times with the new kids on the block. And they are looking newer this year, aren't they? When the cute guys start to look like the kids that play tag with your younger brother, it's time to leave the party. Either it's too many brews, or the side effects of the five year plan. What ever the case, go pick on someone your own size.

Even some old friends have become uncertain acquaintances. When you see that familiar face from freshman chem (or was it rhetoric?) you don't know whether to wave or not. Eventually you don't know whether to care or not. Time to make a fresh start with some new faces. There's a whole world out there past the town lines. It's time to go find it.

The rough edges are smooth as silk. The old obstacles look like cake. The labs were somehow completed in the middle of the night. The program that wouldn't, well eventually it could. The paper was typed, the quiz was postponed, it miraculously snowed, and the final was curved. You no longer consult a map every five feet. Or a bus schedule, or the directions at the top of the test.

Those crayoned letters on the nametag will soon grace a diploma. All the major stumbling blocks are now past experiences. It's time to find a new challenge to conquer. Even Mrs. Perlman would be impressed. After all, I figured this place out on my own.

Letters

Yes to protesting with dignity

To the Editor:

I agree one hundred percent with the idea of shunning former Governor Edward King's speech, as he accepts his honorary degree. To me, turning your backs on the man who, for your four years at the University, turned his back to you, is perfectly symbolic. I believe that all participants should join in this beautifully simple act.

However, I feel that the writers on Thursday's Op-Ed page did not stress the concept of dignity. A protest like this one should be conducted without harassment, hissing, and catcalls, which will merely convince the spectators of your "immaturity." Order shoud be maintained.

I urge you to participate in this protest, but please do it with order and dignity. Have a good graduation.

Arts

The bumbling buffoon

CLEVELAND ORCHESTRA
Victor Borge, Conducting
Wednesday, May 11
Fine Arts Center

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

As a musician and conductor, Victor Borge is superlative. The man can wield a baton with the best of them. However, as a stand-up comedian he is, well, just plain awful. Performing along with the world-renown Cleveland Symphony Orchestra in a concert to benefit the Fine Arts Center Wednesday night, Borge was hardly the man the New York Times once described as "the funniest man in the world;" I was vastly disappointed. I anticipated an evening of witty craziness enhanced by the sumptuous sounds of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra. As it was, the Orchestra was excellent but Borge—whom I took to be the concert's major attraction—was hopelessly tedious.

The program consisted of works by Bernstein, Gershwin, Chophin, Strauss, and Rossini among others—a well-rounded and well-chosen collection of brief pop classics. The Orchestra would perform one of these pieces, and preceding the next they would allow Borge a few minutes to do his improv act and have his fun. And he indeed seemed to be enjoying himself, yet I wish I could say that the audience shared his apparent glee.

Borge is supposedly a master of improvisational comedy, however most of the jokes and bits he performed Wednesday night would not of even brought a chuckle out of a Blue Wall Open Mike Night crowd.

"Oh, how nice! Everyone in the front row here seems to be wearing the same green suit. I'm sorry, those are empty seats!" That brought a grimace to my face, but I figured the night was young and he was just warming-up. But things never did improve. It seemed that Borge was really struggling to come up with witty things to say. Whether it was in making silly remarks about the second celloist's instrument ("What happens if you have to sneeze?"), ragging on the poor souls who happened to stumble in late ("You there! There are plenty of seats up-front."), or even poking fun at himself ("Don't worry, there'll be an intermission soon!"), Borge amazed me with his consistent "unfunniness." But what is really amazing is how he got this far.

I suppose I shouldn't be too hard on Borge, I mean it was a benefit for the Fine Arts Center and was nice enough to consent to do the show. Fortunately, Borge's jumbled jocularities constituted only half the evening's entertainment. There was always the music.

And it was consistently wonderful. The Cleveland Symphony Orchestra performed with the greatest of ease and professionalism. I'm not a real classical music buff, but I know what I like and there was a lot to like about the Cleveland. You see?—good things can come from Cleveland! (Now that's a lame joke!) Anyway, the delicious singing strings of the Cleveland provided a welcome respite from Borge's bumbling buffoonery. And that was no joke.

The evening's highlight was the entrance of Marylyn Mulvey. Mulvey, a young and up-coming soprano who is presently a member of Borge's performing company, provided a refreshing change in pace immediately following intermission. Donned in elegant formal attire, Mulvey stood by Borge's piano and proceeded to belt out an aria or two. Borge was surprisingly successful in his attempts to synthesize his humor with Mulvey's serious singing. He was at times almost funny.

Victor Borge: a terribly unfunny man.

A tale of two cities: Boston vs. New York

By CHRIS FERRETTI
Collegian Staff

Rich, the most obvious question to ask is how anyone can be so incredibly shallow to argue in favor of a city that doubles as a resthome for post-graduate adolescents and attempts to be the cultural mecca of the east? You must be a native Bostonian.

What could possible make you think that I wanted to do this? Are you crazy? Then again, why should I waste my time belaboring the obvious?

It makes no sense to try and compare New York to Boston. New York, the Big Apple, is a wicked awesome (as you Bostonians would say) city while Boston is...well, provincial. Boston conjurs up images of Indians dumping tea in the Bay, and the Indians dumping on the pitchers in the ninth at Fenway.

New York is: the view at twilight from the top of the World Trade Center, it is the East Side of Manhattan, Soho, Chinatown, and Greenwich Village. It is Shakespeare in the Park, Union Square and Fire Island in the summer.

New York is so large that for any negative point there is more than one positive point, while Boston I'm afraid, cannot make the same such claim.

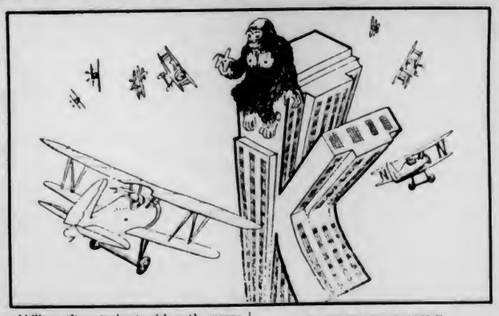
Boston is the home of sports teams that are notorious for folding under pressure. What can I say? The Celtics and the Bruins said it all this year!!! Besides the Red Sox patented a new baseball strategy called the September Fold, with really exceptional years in '78 and '79.

George Steinbrenner may be crass and borish, but at least he isn't cheap!!! If you have the money, why settle for a Ford when you can get a Mercedes?

Yastrzemski is a phenomenal athlete, still playing at age 43, but consider for a minute that he was young again and had just won the triple crown last year. Under the present Red Sox management he would be playing right field for the New York Yankees this season instead of Dave Winfield!!!!!

Come on Rich, get serious. Why would anyone want to live in a city where the bars and clubs close at 2 a.m. and the public transportation ends at 12:30 a.m.?

In the world of culture, Boston, is a piddling vulture trying to pick up the scraps of entertainment that New York and even Cleveland discard.



Even a cosmetic "hard-core" fan like yourself could not possibly satisfy your insatiable appetite on a diet of Boston entertainment. Let's face it, Newbury Comics with its alleged punk reputation is now much too chic to merit serious consideration.

You have to go to New York; Boston is a cultural desert. The Bottom Line, the Ritz, and the Village Gate sure beat places like Spit which is a poseurs paradise, and even your favorite, The Channel, the proverbial rock and roll shopping mall.

Aside from trendy Newbury Street, Boston's only shopping district consists of Filene's and Jordan Marsh which happen to be right next to the Red Light District. At least there is some choice in New York!!

Rich, you are the type of person who will love Boston until you are too old to slam dance. After all these years in the "happy valley" of Amherst, a hick town like Boston has taken on the imposing dimensions of a major metropolis.

Rich, image wise, I admit it, New Yorkers do have a problem, but in street wise acumine and urban sophistication the Big Apple cannot be beat. Let's face it, Boston just cannot compare to New York on any level.

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Chris, I think the first question everyone is asking is how can you possibly be stupid enough to argue in favor of a rat-infested scumhole like New York City. You must be awfully dumb. But remember, you wanted to do this, not me.

New York City reminds me of a chameleon. When something goes wrong in the Big Apple all you have to do is change colors.

This is especially true where sports are concerned.

New York is the home of the most despicable team in all of Major League Baseball; the New York Yankees. But if the Yankees have a bad year you can turn to the Mets, although that has been tough to do in recent years, hasn't it?

The Yankees are owned by the convicted liar himself; George Steinbrenner. Each year the idiot goes off the deep end earlier than the one before. If new, I mean old, manager Billy Martin lasts past July it will be a miracle.

You can always tell a Long Islander on campus, Chris. The Long Islander is wearing the blown back hairstyle which has "Poor Dick's" written all over it. Rumor has it that the dream of every Long Island boy is to grow up and become John Travolta. Is this culture? Oh my God I'm vomiting.

You talk about the music scene in New York, Chris. It is a laugh. Many bands say they hate to play in New York because the crowds are not especially responsive. You see, New York is so large and diverse that everyone wants to play there. But it doesn't have to follow that the crowds become spoiled. Not so surprisingly (to a Bostonian, anyway) bands point to Boston as a place where they get the best audience response. New York may be somewhat interesting, but the people are dull, dull disco.

And yes Chris, New York is full of a million things to do. But where is more of the capital made, through sales of Broadway tickets or drug deals? And while on the subject of drugs, I don't know if the quality is more superior in Boston or New York. But at least you don't have guys walking up to you on the street saying "Coke! Speed! Mescaline!" in a voice that would attract any police officer's ears.

Yes Boston may be smaller than New York. But who wants to live in a city that's bigger than Rhode Island. It takes a long time to get around in the big apple. And while Boston may have its Roxbury and Eastie, New York has marathon versions of slum life in Harlem and Yonkers. At least you can walk to Fenway Park without getting mugged. Getting to Yankee Stadium unharmed is a major accomplishment.

Another drawback to New York that must never be forgotten is the fact that it borders New Jersey. New Jersey people are not only boring but they're also contaminated with chemical waste. In fact, recent experiments conducted by the UMass chemistry department have determined that there is more dioxin poisoning stuck to the average Jerseyite than in the entire town of Times Beach, Missouri.

People who live in New York shouldn't smoke Chris, the pollution is enough to give anybody a death-like case of smokers hack.

If you want to waste the rest of your life in New York that's fine with me. But the only enlightenment you'll ever find there is a different kind of culture - the throat culture.

Commencement 1983
10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 28
University of Massachusetts at Amherst

Instruction for Participants

All Candidates
There will be no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 28, 1983. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college.

Who Is Eligible to Participate?

Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1983. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master's degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 29, 1983 to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 29, 1983. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTHWEST end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities/Information Center and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early to ensure good seating. Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each undergraduate/graduate student will receive a packet of six formal invitations. Students are urged to encourage their guests to arrive early for good seating.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods

Undergraduate Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Master's Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., upon presentation of an I.D. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each Ph.D. candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the university will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A251 Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $26. [Five College Doctoral Hoods will be available at $42.95.]

Rentals for Faculty
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their rental orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS WEDNESDAY, MAY 18. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds if apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Szelewicki at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for Friday before Commencement. A limited number of rooms in University housing will be available for relatives and other guests the nights of May 27 and 28. Please contact the University Summer Conference Office, 918 Campus Center, 545-3400, by May 10. Fees: $15 single/$21 double, per night. There is a $5 cash key deposit — to be returned when the key is returned.

Gorillas nipped in OT, 11-10, in finale

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — The Season of Frustration for the 1983 University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team has finally come to a close.

Some players may be glad it's over, some may not. You can't read their minds. But, when the Gorillas (5-10) boarded the bus after dropping a 11-10 overtime decision to the University of New Hampshire Saturday in Durham, the realization that a season which almost nothing went their way was over may have been relieving.

This game ended like many of the Gorilla losses this year. It was a close game, well played by both teams with great plays on both sides, and in the end breaks went against the Gorillas.

In losses earlier in the year, it was a bad penalty or a defensive blunder at the most inopportune moment that would cost UMass the game. But, Saturday, the Gorillas were victims of an unusual play where the officials missed an obvious call.

UMass controlled the faceoff to open the overtime period and had several excellent scoring opportunities denied by excellent goal tending.

And when New Hampshire bore in on Gorilla goalie Dan Altschuler with several one on one situations, he made a couple of unbelievable plays to keep the Gorilla's hopes alive in the sudden death overtime period.

The Gorillas controlled the ball with 30 seconds to play in the overtime when Tom Alderich dropped the ball trying to hand it off to a midfielder. New Hampshire picked up the loose ball and in the ensuing skirmish called time out.

UNH head coach Ted Garber (yes, the son) called for a triple pick on Gorilla defenseman Brad Broadwell to free UNH leading scorer Chad Doe for the final shot.

But that wasn't the illegal part. The illegality occured when a UNH picman grabbed Broadwell by the jersey openly enough to be brought to the attention of the officials by the Gorillas.

But there was no call and Doe broke free to score the winning goal that may give UNH a shot at the eighth and final playoff playoff spot in the national tournament.

"What can I say," head UMass coach Dick Garber. "It was one hell of a lacrosse game."

Before the game, the Gorillas decided to use all four goalies in the final game. Senior Chris Bendetto started in net before Tom Curran took over for the second period. Gerry Moreau started the third quarter and Altschuler played the fourth quarter and the overtime period.

"We decided before the game since all of them have been playing about the same, we'd give them all a shot," said Garber. "They all played well and Aitschuler made some great plays."

There will be no more saves and no more shots until next year.

UMass successfully collars UNH in this years earlier game at Boyden. But the Gorillas fell short yesterday dropping the season finale 11-10 in overtime.

most of those three outs.

Dean Bennett walked, and Bruce Emerson and Comeau singled to load the bases with no outs. Hickey bore down, though, and struck out two of UMass' best batters — Waszczuk and Salustri. Things looked pretty dim but the Minutemen never gave up.

Jeff Cimini walked to force in a run and narrow the score to 7-4. Andy Conners then hit a bloop single to knock in two runs and bring the Minutemen within one with men on first and third and two down.

The tying run was to remain 90 feet from home plate as catcher Butch LeBlanc grounded to third and the season was over.

"I really admire the way they came back," said Littlefield. "We just have some guys that really want to win."

Coach Dick Bergquist was pleased with his team and the season.

"They were one of the better groups of players I've had in terms of togetherness and spirit. It was quite an accomplishment to go from 2-10 and get 19 victories," said Bergquist.

URI falls

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Rhode Island, who beat out the UMass softball team for a NCAA berth, dropped their best two of three series, 2-0, to UCLA in first round action in Kingston, R.I. this weekend.

URI, who got three hits between both games, lost the first game 1-0, in nine innings, and lost the second 1-0, in 12 innings. UCLA, led by All-American Dot Richardson, had five hits in the opener and nine hits in the second game.

URI finished up with a 26-13 record.

Defending champions nip Harvard

Belvander boosts UM

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

If anyone missed the first University of Massachusetts-Harvard women's lacrosse game in which UMass just nudged Harvard 7-6, then they could have seen a repeat performance on Saturday when the Gazelles put on the same show to again nudge Harvard 7-6, at NOPE field, in the quarterfinals of the NCAA championships.

The win sends UMass to the final four this weekend at the University of Pennsylvania. UMass will face Temple in the semi-finals.

The Gazelles, who are seeking their second consecutive NCAA championship, were tied with the Crimson at 6-6 when defenseman Linda Bevelander scored the winning goal with 2:03 left in the game.

After a Harvard scoring opportunity was spoiled by UMass goaltender Rita Hubner, Bevelander rushed up the field and fired the ball into the Crimson goal as approximately 200 UMass fans went wild.

For the remaining minute and a half after a Crimson turnover, UMass played catch behind the Harvard net to waste time and eliminate any chance for Harvard to tie it up again.

"Identical. The style of play was exactly the same," UMass coach Pam Hixon said, comparing the two games with Harvard this season. "Harvard did what we expected them to do and we did what Harvard expected us to do.

"We have a tendency against Harvard to go up by a few goals and Harvard always closes the gap. We needed to be ready and stay within a goal if we could, so toward the end of the game we'd be ready to come back."

Pam Moryl, who leads the team with 37 goals and 46 points, gave UMass a 1-0 lead seven minutes into the match. Harvard's Jennifer White evened it with 3:52 left in the first half before UMass made its move.

Tish Stevens, who led the team with four goals and one assist on the day, netted two more goals at 2:50 and 0:33, to give the Gazelles a 3-1 lead.

With 10 seconds left, Stevens hit Bunny Forbes with a pass from behind the net. Standing in front of the half open net, Forbes scored to give the Gazelles a comfortable 4-1 lead at halftime.

Harvard picked up the pace in the second half and kept in the UMass end for most of the beginning of the half. The Crimson's aggressive play began to pay itself off in goals very quickly.

As the fireworks went off, Harvard scored four unanswered goals to take a 5-4 lead in five minutes span. The Gazelles lost their three goal lead in the first eight minutes of the game.

Stevens did not allow the one goal margin to last long as she whipped the ball in the net less than a minute later at 16:57 to tie it up at five each.

With 7:51 left in the game, Harvard scored to take a 6-5 lead. However, 18 seconds later, Stevens struck again to tie the match at 6-6. The victory was clinched five minutes later as Bevelander netted the game winning goal.

Next up for the Gazelles will be the semifinals and finals this weekend at UPenn in Philadelphia. UMass will face off against Temple, a 16-6 winner over Princeton Saturday.

Gazelle netminder stands tall, leads team to Final Four

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

She was the one who cheered the loudest on the field and the one who was not going to throw in the towel when a 4-1 lead dwindled to a 5-4 deficit.

UMass lacrosse goaltender Rita Hubner controlled the prowling 23 shot Harvard attack when she had to.

But that was not to say that the spunky senior netminder was not just a little anxious.

"I started to worry because when a team comes back that fast, you really don't know what the final score of the game's going to be," she said. "You wonder if you're going to be able to contain your head to hold the team from scoring anymore, so your offense can do their work."

A victory for UMass and some early celebrating for the never-say-die goalie followed.

"I never give up even without a helmet," Hubner said referring to when a whistle was blown which stopped play with three seconds left in the game.

"I threw up my helmet in the air because I thought the clock was going to run out. Then I saw them (Harvard) coming at me. I thought I was going to have to kiss the ball with my teeth."

Another person who did not give up even when the tables were turned on UMass was coach Pam Hixon. While Hubner was shaking in her shoes, Hixon kept her confidence in Hubner.

"Rita's the kind of goaltender that plays best under pressure," Hixon said. "This year in particular, Rita has really pulled herself together to give this team the lift it needed. She still comes back with the big save when we need her and she did that today."

Hubner compiled a 3.45 goals against average this season, second best in the country. Limiting Harvard to six goals was no picnic as the Crimson scored an average of 14.9 goals a game, third best in the country.

"I've been saying to myself all week, 'We're not going to lose this game.' We beat them before," said Hubner.

With the semifinals against top seeded Temple approaching this weekend, UMass and Rita Hubner will be ready as ever.

"Hey, we're going to do it," Hubner confidently predicted.

UMass strands their playoff hopes

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team never gave up but they never caught up either so they saw their season end Saturday afternoon with men on first and third in the top of the ninth inning and the score 7-6 against the University of Connecticut at McCoy Stadium in Pawtucket, R.I.

The UConn game became a must game when, in a 10 a.m. contest versus the University of Maine (which was a make-up of Friday night's rain out), the Minutemen were blanked by Maine starter Stu Lacognata (5-1) on eight hits, 5-0.

Tony Presnal (5-2) was the hard-luck loser of the Maine game even though he and Jim Gallagher combined to give up only eight hits. Five errors and lack of timely hitting doomed the Minutemen. Despite the fact that Lacognata walked eight men along with giving up eight hits, UMass did not convert its opportunities into runs. The Minutemen left 14 men on base (25 in both games.)

The key play of the game occurred in the fifth inning. Down 1-0, UMass' Steve Messina tried scoring from second on a Todd Comeau single. As he was rounding third, Messina ran into Maine third baseman Bill Nutter and was consequently thrown out at the plate by left fielder Bill Swift (yes, the same Swift who pitches). The umpire did not see it fit to call interference on Nutter.

"That play really hurt us," said UMass third base coach Dave Littlefield. "It crushed us momentum wise. Still, we couldn't get the clutch hit while Maine got some big hits."

The real heartbreaker, though, was the UConn game.

The Minutemen fell behind 5-1 after five innings as UMass' hurler Bob Kostro (4-5) was having his problems.

Dean Bennett, the senior second baseman, dives back to base under the tag in an earlier game this year.

The lone UMass run came in the second when an Angelo Salustri triple scored Chris Waszczuk.

The Minutemen got two more runs off of Husky starter Chris Steurenagel (3-3) on a Butch LeBlanc 2 RBI single.

However, by the time the ninth inning rolled around, UMass reliever Scott Foster had been touched for two runs and the Minutemen were staring at a 7-3 deficit with only three outs separating them from the end of their season.

Facing Husky reliever Chris Hickey, UMass made the Ad Hoc group urges reinstatement of dismissed EWC members

By Russell D. Jordan

In an interview with members of an ad hoc committee set up in support of the three dismissed members of the Everywoman's Center (EWC), Mary Wentworth, Malika Jones and Marianne O'Leary, NUMMO NEWS was told last week what transpired at the Committee's meeting on May 6 at Whitmore with UMass officials Gloria DeGuevera and Bob Welch, representatives of the Vice-Chancellor presiding over the grievance procedures filed by two of the dismissed women.

The three women were dismissed during a recent change in directors at the Everywoman's Center. Members of the ad hoc committee interviewed are Donna Scamper, Steve Coons and Christine Retzel.

Opening the meeting Ms. DeGuevera explained that due to, "official University policy," and legal restraint regarding the handling of grievance procedures she was "constrained" and could not discuss specific cases, but would welcome discussion concerning the general politics of the EWC. Despite this caution, several persons at the meeting commented directly about the women involved in the dismissal procedures. Donna Scamper said about Mary Wentworth, "Mary Wentworth did a fine job. The fact that Mary has been dismissed sticks out like a sore thumb." Ms. Scamper cited Ms. Wentworth's, "radical viewpoints" as a possible reason for her dismissal. Deborah Friedman, former coordinator of Prospect House, a shelter for homeless people said of Ms. Wentworth, "The University needs to be responsible to the community. Mary provided that link between the community and the University."

Steve Coons said, "I was shocked to find out about the firing of these diligent, conscientious, hard-working women." Mr. Coons also accused the University of not following due process in dismissing Ms. Jones and Ms. Wentworth, saying, "normally six months notification is required for an act of dismissal or non-renewal of contract. Both Mary and Malika were given less than six months notice as regards their dismissal. In the case of Marianne O'Leary, she was dismissed within two weeks of achieving permanent University status."

All members of the ad hoc committee had high praise for Mary Wentworth's performance of her job and praised her for having a caring, sensitive attitude toward the women she helped. Christine Retzel said, "Mary has been charged with not recruiting enough women into the University. Mary's workload is heavy enough, if the University was concerned about recruiting women, why don't they find a position solely for the process of recruitment?"

Many former members of the Everywoman Center traced the cause of the problems to a change in the organizational structure of the Center from one of a collective mode to a more traditional, hierarchical model of operation. Several of the people present questioned the Centers' commitment to poor and Third World women stating that Mary Wentworth and Malika Jones had been quite effective at helping women from these groups at the University.

In a separate interview, the director, Ruth Weekes-Washington said, "The Center has not changed its commitment to women, in particular to low income women and women receiving Aid to Families with Dependant Children (AFDC) payments. We are concerned with how we can most effectively serve women."

Ms. Washington refused to comment directly about the cases concerning the dismissals of the three women, citing University policy regarding public statements about employees pursuing grievance procedures. Ms. Washington added, "the organizational structure of the Everywoman's Center changed from a collective mode to a hierarchal mode long before I arrived." Ms. Washington defended the Center saying, "the Center is doing a fantastic job serving poor women. The Center is where women can get together to help other women. Our commitment towards those ends is serious."

The ad hoc committee supporting the three dismissed women listed its demands at the meeting. Said Steve Coons, "We are endorsing the following demands: that Malika Jones, Marianne O'Leary, and Mary Wentworth be reappointed and/or reinstated; that another position be funded for Educational Access and Outreach at the Everywoman's Center so that the Poor Woman's Task Force can continue to address the needs of low income women; and finally, a community advisory board be established for the Center so that there is a vehicle for expression of community concerns and a counterbalance to the administration."

A Goodbye From Nummo

an editorial comment

Farewell and have a good summer!

We of Nummo News hope all our readers have a productive and/or relaxing summer break, whether at work or at play.

For the graduates especially: do not despair over lacking concrete life plans. To have obtained a college degree is, in itself, an outstanding achievement. Remember, this struggle is one that was undertaken for more reason than just "making it." Also, remember, you have much to contribute to the community beyond your individual economic standing. Our advice, just worry about one thing at a time.

For all summer departees, whether returning next fall or not, please recognize that there is little escape from the problems facing all but the most "traditional," middle-class students in the attempt to complete an undergraduate education. Both the minimum SAT admissions requirements, to affect all Massachusetts public collegesand universities in 1987 and imposed on us by the Regents, and the outcries against the inadequacies of our high schools, put forth by various national commissions of late, embody attacks on us as the consumers of higher education.

The arguments that high schools across the nation are not stringent enough, or do not promote high enough standards as measured in quantitative terms through standardized tests, etc. put the blame on students who will be expected to submit to "tougher" schooling, even as our schools budgets suffer cuts and more cuts! The real problems of budget cutting for the sake of escalating military spending and the widespread inequities in our high schools will go unaddressed and the students will then be expected to pay, unless we do something about it.

This situation will affect not only our younger sisters and brothers attempting to further their educations, but all of us who are to face this mentality in the workplace and elsewhere. Blaming the victims of the prevailing retrogressive policies is an age-old tactic to diffuse the opposition.

We hope as you make ready to take off from Amherst, that you take time to touch base with your community, with other students and give thought to these issues in between all those summer happenings.

Get involved in something in your free time!! Don't wait for someone else to organize a bus from your community to the August 27, Washington, D.C. march commemorating the 20th anniversary of the historic 1963 civil rights march led by Martin Luther King, Jr. Help organize it yourself. (Contact Corretta Scott King at the King Center for Social Change in Atlanta, GA., for more information.)

And, don't forget — have a good summer. We'll see you next fall.

Johnetta Cole addresses problems in higher ed.

By Angela Brown
and Tracey Bryant

Associate Provost Johnetta Cole, who will be on leave from UMass next year, addressed national trends in education, as they affect Third World students, and the implications of narrow educational policies like those being enacted in Massachusetts, in an interview with Nummo last week. Having served as a member of the faculty for 13 years, and as Associate Provost for the last two, Ms. Cole will be offering her expertise to the Hunter College community in New York City.

In response to recent outcries against the inadequacies of the national educational system, Ms. Cole expressed "concern over critique without suggested avenues for addressing the problems." Ms. Cole insisted that the problems do exist, but that "we seem to want to have our cake and eat it too." She elaborated on this, saying that we want quality education while cutting educational funding, through measures like Proposition 13 in California, and Proposition 2 ½ in Massachusetts. There is "not enough serious attention to the cost of education . . . the material and the non-material costs," she added. While 'too much attention "is focused on the 'final product' . . . not enough" is focused "on the sources and processes" contributing to an educated public.

Ms. Cole said this especially affects Third World people attempting to further their educations, because "a lot of focus is on students who are least prepared" to go on to college. They are looked at "as if it is in fact their own fault," she stated.

She said this is done by many critics at the expense of looking at the underlying causes of the inferior education Third World students receive. "What is the differential in budget status . . . in expectations . . . in early tracking systems?" are some of the questions Ms. Cole raised. The standardized testing of prospective students raises many concerns of racial, ethnic and class bias as evident in test results, asserted Ms. Cole, who criticized "the absence of enough sensitivity" to these biases.

"It seems to me very little is served by having those of us in higher education turn in a snobbish and elitist way," to criticize public schools, she said. Ms. Cole asserted "the most productive way for us to turn . . . (is) in a collegial way and say how can we work together." She said this attitude is needed instead of attacking public school teachers.

"The single worst thing that could happen to higher education is a move toward 'quality' mechanically, and rigidly defined in terms of SAT's, the number of credit hours, etc.," Ms. Cole stated. "I think 'quality' must include the presence of diversity."

On the question of declining Black enrollment in higher education, Ms. Cole said, Third World people should get informed "about what the demographers are saying." According to Ms. Cole, demographic trends show that in the aftermath of the 'baby boom' a higher proportion of college enrollments may be drawn from "Third World pools."

She expressed concern about what could happen if increasing numbers of Third World students are sought by colleges and universities. "Where are the faculty and staff with the sensitivity and training to make it (college) a successful experience?" she asked. In addition, the availability of financial aid could prove to be a determining factor.

Ms. Cole hopes to return to the University "to contribute to positive, needed change." She intends to continue her work in, hopefully, a combined administrative and instructional capacity. She said she was trying "to find the right mix," as many are trying to do, to make contributions to the University community.

While Hunter college may be borrowing her from us for awhile, Ms. Cole intends to re-establish her home in Amherst.

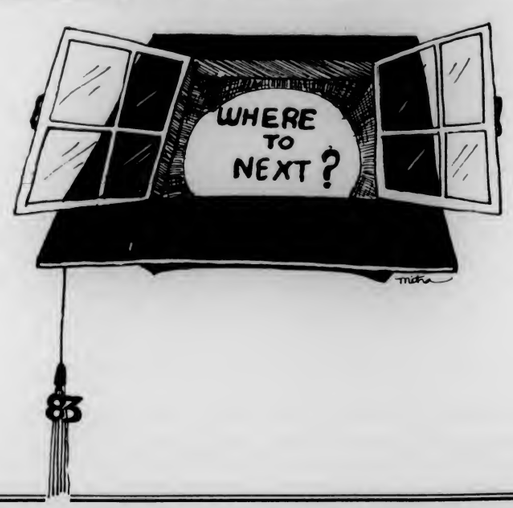
Congratulations to BCP's 1983 graduates.



CCEBMS HEARTFELT CONGRATULATIONS to the Class of 1983

It is a great feeling to know that in some small way we at CCEBMS have assisted you in achieving one of your life's goals; attaining a college degree. For me, it has been a pleasure to see you make the long transition from freshman summer orientation to graduation. For many, the road has been a challenge, but realize that without hard work, there is no real satisfaction.

As you reflect on your college experiences, I hope positive memories come to your thoughts. Remember all the educational, social, cultural and political lessons you have learned here. Hopefully, in retrospect, you will look at your tenure at the University of Massachusetts and CCEBMS as a significant part of your lives.

Now, as alumni of CCEBMS, you can assist us in our objective to reach and assist your family members, friends, and other students who will follow. At the same time we will work to keep you informed of future plans and changes. You will still be an integral part of the program and can lend your support to our alumni development and networking efforts.

As a final note, I would hope all of you remember to involve yourselves in the political process and take an active role in your communities.

Please accept my warmest congratulations on a job well done, class of 1983! And to quote my favorite music group, "KEEP YOUR HEAD TO THE SKY!"

Sincerely,
John Lopes

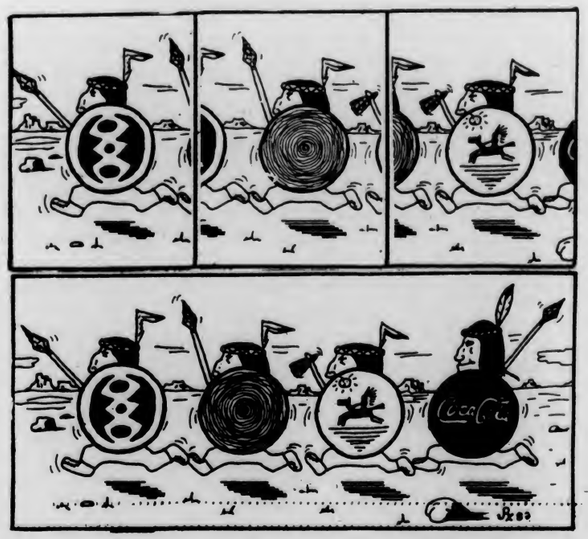
Greetings to the African Students Association

The staff of Nummo News is pleased and excited to welcome the formation of the African Students Association of the Five-College community.

We recognize the importance of having such an organization, as a mode of expression and action, for African students in the area. We also look forward to the activities and other contributions that this vital organization can provide to the Amherst community.

We wish the best of luck and extend our warmest greetings to you. Have a good summer and see you next fall!



Williams College: $$$ from Apartheid

By Brenda Ling

The six-year issue of Williams College's investments in companies doing business in South Africa has drawn students, faculty, administrators, and trustees alike into the political arena. The Western Massachusetts college has yet to set down a policy on the institution's responsibility to make a public statement against apartheid, but the decision is now in the hands of the trustees and the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibilities (ASCR) that advises the trustees on investment matters.

The past five months of heated debate began last January with a student group's seven-day hunger strike. The students called for divestment of the $20 million of stocks invested in firms not yet complying with the Sullivan Principles. The Sullivan Principles are guidelines to require U.S. businesses that operate in South Africa to adhere to a racial quota system and fair employment practices in their plants. (The principles say nothing about eradicating the regime's apartheid policies.)

The trustees did not respond to the students' action, but one member of the board proposed to take a faculty vote. At a meeting three weeks ago, pro- and anti-divestment faculty agreed to propose, in addition to companies furthering investigations and not expanding operations in South Africa, that the trustees advise those companies in South Africa to contribute actively to bettering Blacks' and Non-Whites' living conditions there.

Throughout the past six years the administration has clung to the abstract principle of a university's fundamental right to political neutrality. Last month's issue of Williams Reports was devoted to the subject of "Williams as a Responsible Investor" and includes articles by the College's President, Treasurer, Chairman of the Trustee Finance Committee, and the ACSR. Quotes from these articles describe the administration's sentiments.

> A college is a voluntary society rather than a political commonwealth.
> There is virtually no evidence to suggest that selling a company's stock is an effective way to influence that company's behavior.
> A potentially large and ongoing cost would result from restricting the choices open to our investment managers.

Moreover, the economics of selling the stock as a political statement against Williams' investors has caused the trustees to state that "economic affairs present a much more tangled spectacle than that of simple choices between financial gain and respect for human rights."

Williams' administrators and trustees have received the support of campuses around the country. Harvard University and the University of Chicago both agree with the University of Michigan's idea that a university's role "is to engage in education, not in politics, (as) there is no end to such political participation once we begin it." Clearly the Williams' trustees do not want to venture into never ending politics, especially when such an uproar occurs within the campus community. They will meet later this month, but no one knows how students' and the faculty's actions will affect the board, if the subject of divestment is even on this month's agenda.

The trustees' long awaited decision, whenever announced, will not end all political discussion, but the whole community's active participation has begun to further the U.S. - South African dialogue beyond economic embargo and now to actual changes in people's lives.

Office of Minority Graduate Student Recruitment

By Keith Johnson

Many students are aware of CCEBMS and BCP which are the academic support units for minority undergraduates. But there is also a support unit for graduate students here at the University called the Office of Minority Graduate Student Recruitment (OMGSR). OMGSR, which was opened five years ago, was created to increase the participation of minority students in graduate study through recruitment and financial aid support.

The director of the office is Dr. Judith Toyama. Dr. Toyama is a native of Bridgetown, N.J. but grew up mainly in Los Angeles, California. She is of Japanese decent who's parents had to live through the humiliation of an Arizona concentration camp during World War II.

After her family moved to Los Angeles from New Jersey, she went to public schools that had mainly Black populations. She then went to University of Southern California (USC,) and graduated in physical education and English. Then it was on to the University of Wisconsin and her Masters and then the University of Waterloo, in Canada, for a Doctorate in sports psychology. It was at the University of Wisconsin that Dr. Toyama first came into contact with the close minded and racist attitudes which was more of a surprise after living in the city of L.A.

In 1977 she came here to become a Professor in sports psychology and a year later she was brought on to become the part-time director of the then new OMGSR. The position was later upgraded and Dr. Toyama was made the full-time director. The office also has a Faculty Advisor Committee which is chaired by Dr. Toyama and consists of a number of professors from various departments, such as Prof. Donald St. Mary of math, Prof. Jesse Ortis of public health, and Fred Tillis of music.

The OMGSR conducts off-campus recruitment thru recruitment trips and response to direct mail inquiries. Many of the recruitment trips include trips to various Black colleges such as Winston-Salem State, Southern University, Jackson State, Hampton Institute, Howard and Spellman. There are also trips to large universities such as UCLA, Standford, U. of Cincinnati, UConn and U. of Houston. The OMGSR also takes part in career conferences in places such as Philadelphia, Boston and Atlanta.

The OMGSR is able to provide financial aid through the use of teaching assistantships. Thirty one of these positions are available through this program. The positions are available in departments that decide to sponsor a graduate student.

The positions are used as an incentive for departments to support the students the following year under their own, because the OMGSR does not sponsor students past their first year. But many departments do take students on the following year to stay in the OMGSR's favor and be looked on to sponsor other first year students. Also many of the minority graduate students have done well in their teaching assistants positions.

The office also keeps record of the amount of minority students in school. For example, in 1981 there were 444 minority graduate students; 18 are American Indian, 167 are Hispanic, 185 are Black, and 66 are of Asian origin. It was reported last year that 9.1 percent of all doctorates were awarded to minority graduates and 8.54 percent of all masters degrees were awarded to minority students in May 1981.

The OMGSR provides information about other financial aid for graduate students. Federal funding that is provided through programs such as National Rurals Fellows, GPOP and NSF Minority Fellows. But many of these programs have received budget cuts from the present administration.

There has been problems in getting some minority students matriculated in graduate programs. Much of it is for financial reasons. Many budgets have been cut and there is not much money for financial aid from either the federal programs, univerity departments, or the OMGSR. Also many minorities are graduates with professional undergraduate degrees such as engineering or business which leads to more students going for jobs instead of continuing school.

One of the problems that the office has is the overall breakdown of minority students in the different departments. There are not many minority graduate students in many of the science departments but there is a large number of minority graduate students in the education department. This causes problems because the department can only sponsor so many teaching assistantships. So some of these students may have trouble finding positions.

Dr. Toyama hopes in the future to increase the amount of graduate students. She also would like to help to reactivate the Minority Graduate Student Organization because she feels that they need a support system. Dr. Toyama herself is involved in a support network between different schools across the country called the Minority Admissions Recruitment Network.

For those undergraduates thinking of continuing on in graduate school, Dr. Toyama suggests that students apply for schools and tests early. Also the office carries information on different law and graduate schools. For more information contact the OMGSR at Rm. A231, Graduate Research Center here at UMass or call (413) 545-3424.

The DuBois Corner: Matthew Henson

By Rahim Imani

On April 6, 1909 a small group of men headed north through some of the coldest weather on earth. The men were the lead scouting party for Naval Commander Robert E. Peary and his expedition in search of the North Pole. The group consisted of a number of Eskimos and a Black man named Matthew Henson.

Henson first met Commander Peary while he was working as a clerk in a Washington, D.C. clothing store, Peary took Henson in on his North Pole exploration project and together they worked for 23 years. Peary would later find that Henson was the best explorer in his operation.

Matt Henson learned how to speak the Eskimo language like a native and was very popular with the Eskimos that worked with the Peary expedition. He learned all of the survival skills needed to get through the frigid weather of the North Pole. Henson made all of the sledges and stoves for the expedition.

The expedition to the North Pole was rugged as the men traveled almost twenty hours a day, traveling at night while sleeping during the warmth of the day. Henson, heading the lead scout party soon relaized that the group not only had reached the North Pole, but had passed over it by a mile. He told the Eskimos in his party to build an igloo and wait for Peary who was 45 minutes behind. When they got there it was Henson who placed the American flag on top of the world.

In recognition for his expeditions to the North Pole,Henson was awarded a medal for outstanding service by Congress in 1945. Later, President Eisenhower honored Henson at the White House and the state of Maryland placed a plaque in the State House in his honor. This made him the first Black person to be honored by a southern state.

Commander Peary was credited with leading the North Pole expedition. But it was a Black man named Matt Henson who, with the held of Eskimos, first stood on to of the world.

The Seta Rampersad Scholarship Fund

The Seta Rampersad Scholarship Fund was formed in 1982 as a memorial to Seta Rampersad, a 20-year-old Third World woman who was an undergraduate at the University of Massachusetts. Seta, a political science major and senior was found dead in Motel 6 in South Deerfield on September 13, 1978.

Seta was the daughter of immigrant parents who came from Trinidad. Seta, if she had lived, would have received her degree in May, 1979. Her career goals included being a legal advocate for Hispanic and Black youths who had been convicted in Springfield.

Recipients of the Seta Rampersad Scholarship must be Third World women undergraduates who have shown a history of commitment to social change in their communities, especially in the areas of health, women's issues, legal reform, Third World organizations, anti-nuke and international solidarity struggles.

Scholarships will be awarded to 2 Third World women undergraduates who have demonstrated good academic work (2.5 cum) and who have shown a sincere devotion to social progress. The award will be $300 and applications are due June 1, 1983 for the fall semester.

Everywomen's Center Calendar

On May 17, 1983 "NOT A TRUE LOVE STORY a film concerning The TRUTH about PORNOGRAPHY!" will be shown at Mahar Auditorium Tuesday at 7:00 p.m. at UMass' School of Business. A discussion will follow the film.

For more information, call 253-5045, 545-0883, 584-5160.

"WHAT COULD YOU DO WITH A NICKEL?" will also be shown on Tuesday, May 17 at 7:30 p.m., Campus Center Rm. 804-808. This film tells the inspiring story of two hundred Black and Latin women in the South Bronx who formed the first domestic workers' union in the history of the United States.

For more information about either film call the Everywomen's Center at 545-0883.

Asian-American Students Association

The Asian-American Students Association is pleased to announce their new officers for next year:
Co-Chair: Kim Ton and Michael Wong
Secretary: Carolyn Lee
Treasurer: Yen-Yen Soohoo
5-College Rep. Kerwin Moy

Thanks to all who showed up at the election. Your support was greatly appreciated.

An Inaugural Ball will be held the beginning of next semester at Michael's house, everyone is welcome. Proper dress is required.

Anyone else interested in being a peer advisor for CCEBMS next semester please contact Jeff Mar at 545-0031.

Anyone interested in helping to re-organize AASA's office is welcome, please contact Kim Ton at 546-4992 for further details.

Special thanks to Cindy Chu, Yat T. Man, Hung Goon, and Hank Wang, our graduating seniors, for all their time and support in AASA the past few years. The best of luck to you all in the future!

And furthermore, good luck on finals, have a great summer and see you all next semester!

May Poetry Series

Chase Twitchell and Archie Shepp will be featured at the Jones Library Poetry Readings in Burnett Gallery, 8:00 p.m. on Tuesday, May 17. There will be no charge for admission.

Chase Twitchell received a Massachusetts Artists' Foundation Fellowship in 1981. Her poety has appeared in Poetry, Ironwood, and other magazines. Her book, Northern Spy, is of the Pitt Poetry Series.

Archie Shepp, renowned saxophonist, playwright and Professor of Music and Afro-American Studies at the University of Massachusetts, is author of "Junebug Graduates Tonight," The Black Drama Anthology. Archie Shepp has recited poetry recently at the Ironhorse in Northampton, in Philadelphia and at Soundscape in New York. A recent album recorded in Europe features his poem, "Mama Rose." Among his many awards, Professor Shepp was voted by Downbeat's International Music Critic's poll in 1982, tenor saxophonist of the year.

On May 31, Kathryn Marshall and Andrew Salkey will present their works as part of Jones Library May Reading Series at 8:00 p.m. in Burnett Gallery.

Kathryn Marshall won a Massachusetts Artists Fellowship this year. Her novels include My Sister Gone, East Texas Summer, Desert Places and a short story in Her Work: Stories by Texas Women. She's active in writing reviews which have appeared in the major newspapers of the country as well as Ms., Savvy and Commonweal. She is Assistant Professor at Mt. Holyoke College.

Andrew Salkey, Jamaican poet and novelist, is Professor of Writing at Hampshire College. Among the many awards he's won are the Thomas Helmore Poetry Prize, the John Simon Guggenheim Award, Deutscher Kinderbuchpreis and the Cuban Casa de las Americas First Prize in Poetry for In the Hills Where Her Dreams Live, an evocation to Chile. He has written over 25 books, some of which are for children and translations. He is a director and literary editor of New Beacon Books and Bogle-L'Ouverture Publications, London.

Fifteen sit in on Whitmore to discuss firings

By KEN "USA" BAZINET

Collegian Staff

Some fifteen persons, including University of Massachusetts faculty, staff and students, yesterday occupied a Whitmore conference room when they learned that Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson cancelled a meeting, where the group had planned to discuss problems involving the Everywoman's Center.

It was later explained that Madson had mailed a letter stating that he would be unable to meet with that group yesterday. Duffey said he will meet with Madson and get a written response for those persons who attended yesterday's meeting.

"We want to know how to provide input into the (University's) grievance procedure," Rev. Donna Schaper told Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, who was forced to sit-in for Madson.

Schaper was one member of a support committee demanding that three staff members recently released by the Everywoman's Center be reinstated; that a new position be created for Educational Access and Outreach at the Everywoman's Center; and a community advisory board be established as a vehicle for expression and counterbalance to the administration.

"I'm not sure what the University's capabilities are," Duffey said in response to those demands. "I don't know what the history of the center is."

The committee protested the termination of the contracts of Mary Wentworth, the coordinator of the center's Poor Women's Task Force; Malika Jones, a coordinator of The Third World Women's Task Force; and Marianne O'Leary, a clerk typist at the center.

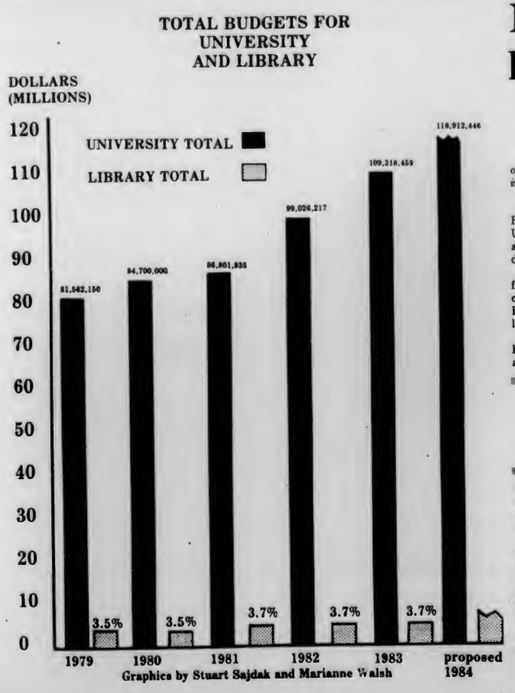
Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey (right) listens to a grievance from one of the fifteen people who occupied a Whitmore conference room after vice-Chancellor Dennis Madson blew off a scheduled meeting with the group.

Wentworth and Jones claim their rights as 02 employees of the University to a six month's notice of reappointment or non-reappointment were violated.

Jim Coopee, Assistant Personnel Director, said only full-time permanent University employees must be given six months notice of non-reappointment. Professional non-academic employeess (02 employees) do not fall into that category, he said.

Grievance procedures were filed by Wentworth and Jones after being notified in March that their contracts would be terminated.

The committee met last week with Robert Welch, special assistant to the vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs. Welch said he would report the group's concerns to the Everywoman's Center, the staff and vice-Chancellor, and that the decisions to respond to the group's demands would be made by either the center, the vice-Chancellor or the Chancellor.



New funding from Regents leaves library budget short

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

[Editor's note: this is the final installment of a two part series focusing on deficiencies in library acquisitions at UMass.]

Prior to the creation of the Board of Regents of Higher Education in 1981, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and its main library received its funding directly from the state legislature.

UMass now receives its state allocations from the Regents, and this has caused complications in the funding of the library, Richard J. Talbot, director of libraries said last week.

"The allocation formula which the Regents have devised sets money aside for all the libraries at the state colleges and universities," Talbot said. The previous system which the legislature controlled allocated money to each school individually, Talbot said.

The regents' system gives a weak indicator of the following year's budget for the library, Talbot said.

"We literally do not know what the budget for next year will be," he said. "The process has been slowed because of the Regents."

While it is assured that UMass' library will receive the largest portion of the Regents' allocation simply because of its size, Talbot said he does not expect to receive a bulk allocation which could be used to make-up the backlog of books, periodicals and scholarly journals.

"We have never received the big money it would take to make up the deficiency," he said.

Talbot said the percentage of the budget which the library receives is about the same as most other research facilities, but the amount of money it receives is in some cases very different.

"UMass is not funded like a state institution should be," Talbot said. "The problem is that the entire University is underfunded by the state."

What has also hampered the growth of the library has been an unstable allocation which has changed from year to year, Talbot said.

"It's reasonable to assume that we will not get the big money," Talbot said, "but our annual funding has never been stable, it has been made to increase and decrease."

"UMass is not funded like a state institution should be. The problem is that the entire University is underfunded by the state. It's reasonable to assume, that we will not get the big money but our annual funding has never been stable."

Talbot, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, and other UMass personnel say they will have to convince the legislature and regents of the importance of increased funding.

"The University is going to have to develop an informational policy," Talbot said. "We have to get people to use the University as a data base."

Talbot said the University Computing Center and the library share a common interest in creating this data base for the state, and this way could help justify increases in the Regent's appropriation.

Students file out of their Brentwood Long Island junior high after a whacko teacher's aide who got fired two weeks ago shot the principal, a student, and took hostages.

Fired teacher kills two in retaliation

BRENTWOOD, N.Y. (AP) — A fired teacher's aide who blamed students for "messing up my career" shot a student and a principal at a junior high school yesterday, then held six students hostage in a classroom, vowing not to leave alive, officials said.

Dressed in Army fatigues and carrying a .22-caliber rifle, a man identified as Robert O. Wickes, 24, invaded Room 201 at East Junior High on Long Island about 12:45 p.m. and proceeded to terrorize an English class.

Both shooting victims were taken to Southside Hospital, where the boy was reported in stable condition and the principal satisfactory.

Five hours after the shootings, the gunman still held six students in the room and ordered a message read on a local radio station in which he threatened to "paint the road with carnage."

Suffolk County police spokesman William McKeon said when Wickes entered, he ordered the teacher to leave the room, then shoved her out of the room when she ran to intercom to summon help.

Wilfred Mercardo, 15, of Bay Shore, said that when principal Stephen Howland came to the room and looked in through the door, Wickes fired his rifle, hitting Howland in the cheek.

As students began screaming and crying, Wickes then walked over to a student who was lying on the floor near a window, said, "You know me," and shot at him but missed, Mercardo said. Next he went to Louis Burgos, 15, and shot him twice at point-blank range, hitting him in the stomach and finger.

Lt. Robert Harris of Suffolk County's 3rd Precinct said Wickes had a history of psychological problems and had attempted suicide six months ago.

School officials said Wickes had been fired as a teacher's aide May 5 after an altercation with Burgos. Earlier, police said Wickes was a substitute teacher.

Senators earned $1.7 million in 1981

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators earned $1.7 million in 1981 for making speeches and writing articles, with more than half the outside income provided by business groups, Common Cause said yesterday.

The self-described citizens' lobby said that Finance Committee Chairman Robert Dole, R-Kansas, was the leading recipient of the so-called honoraria, getting $66,850, or $6,188 more than the annual Senate pay of $60,662.

Common Cause noted, however, that Dole contributed $30,500 of his outside income to various charities. The second leading recipient was Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., who gave the entire $56,250 to unidentified charities.

Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., was third, collecting $54,000 and giving $13,000 of it to charity. The senate's biggest net gainer was Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, who reported receiving $48,000 and giving none of it to charity.

The report, compiled from disclosure statements submitted by senators last year, covered the 95 men and women in the Senate both in 1981 and 1983.

Eight members reported no outside income in 1981. They were Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas; Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; Carl Levin, D-Mich.; Russell Long, D-La.; John Stennis, D-Miss.; John Warner, R-Va.; and Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb.

The other 87 shared $1,715,634 — an average of $19,720 per senator. Twenty-one of the recipients donated a total of $175,705 to charity.

U.S., Soviets talking arms again

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The United States opens a new round of arms talks with the Soviet Union today with an offer to set equal limits on nuclear warheads in Europe.

Chief U.S. delegate Paul H. Nitze will ask the top Soviet negotiator, Yuli A. Kvitsinsky, to suggest where to place the ceiling. American strategists are thinking in terms of about 300 warheads on both sides.

But Kvitsinsky already has criticized the U.S. proposal as no real departure from President Reagan's initial "zero-option" plan, and administration officials predict little headway in the new round of negotiations.

The Soviets want to prevent deployment of new U.S. missiles in Europe and say the 162 missiles the British and French possess should be included in any count of nuclear arms available to the West.

Any breakthrough in the talks, which opened 18 months ago, is most likely to come when the Soviets are up against the scheduled December deployment of a dozen U.S. ground-launched cruise missiles in Britain and West Germany, according to American analysts.

The missiles are part of a NATO plan to deploy 572 Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Britain, West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands and Italy.

Today's meeting will be at the Soviet mission and Nitze will speak first. The next session will be Thursday in the American office, with Kvitsinsky starting the discussion.

Car buyers with lemons could have legal recourse under bill

BOSTON — New car buyers in Massachusetts who wind up with a "lemon" will have some legal recourse if the full Legislature and Gov. Michael Dukakis agree with a bill advanced by the Commerce and Labor Committee yesterday.

"From now on, we will try to keep the sale of lemons confined to the grocery store," said Rep. Timothy Bassett, House chairman of the committee.

The measure, sent to the floor with a recommendation for passage, applies to any new car, motorcycle or truck during the first year or 15,000 miles of operation.

It provides that:

—Manufacturers or their authorized dealers have three chances, without penalty, to repair a single defect and a total of 15 days to repair any combination of defects. Failing to meet these limits, they would have one more chance to fix the car, and the job would have to be completed within seven business days.

—If the problem continues, the consumer would be entitled to a refund or a replacement car.

—Before going to court to enforce his rights, the car owner would have to take his case to a yet-to-be-named arbitration board, half of whose members would be named by the industry and half by the state secretary of consumer affairs. The board would have 40 days to make its decision, which would be binding on the manufacturer but not on the consumer, who could press his claim in court.

Judge overturns treasury rule, plaintiffs can make Cuba trips

BOSTON — A federal appeals court yesterday said a lower court should not have upheld Treasury Department regulations that prevented several Boston-area people from traveling to Cuba last year.

The 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here also ordered the federal district court to issue a preliminary injunction against the regulations, a move an attorney says means anyone now can travel to Cuba.

The case, involving Harvard biology professor Ruth Hubbard Wald and others against Treasurer Donald Regan, concerned a trip planned for last summer.

Mrs. Wald had gone to Cuba two weeks in the fall of 1981 and wanted to return last summer with several other Boston area people on an educational trip to study women's issues, "to talk to Cuban women about their lives," she explained Monday when reached at her Harvard office.

"We had it all planned for last summer, but we'll get together and start planning again, of course," she said after learning of the ruling.

Veterans opt for vanity plates

BOSTON — There's a new vanity license plate in Massachusetts for American prisoners of war, a group of men who say they have mixed feelings about the distinction.

So far, the Registry of Motor Vehicles has given out 575 of the plates, which show a strip of barbed wire and the words "EX POW" on two lines before the registration number. About 1,200 former POWs live in the Bay State.

Thirty-five other states have issued similar tags to their former prisoners of war, and many of them, says former World War II POW Bill Arnold of Acton, Mass., exempt their owners from paying auto excise taxes.

The Massachusetts POW plate owners are exempt now from paying a $20 registration fee. A bill to provide a break on the auto excise tax is being forwarded by Sen. Francis D. Doris, D-Revere, who helped push the license plate measure through the Legislature earlier this year.

Murder suspect still at large

BROCKTON — Authorities yesterday sought a man wanted on murder warrants in the death of two women, although they say the man's attorney repeated that he expects his client to surrender.

Vincent Robertson, 29, has been the target of nationwide manhunt for a week since the bodies of the two women were discovered in a Brockton house.

Three-month-old Victoria Ross, the daughter of Robertson and one of the victims, has been returned to Massachusetts. She apparently was taken from the house after the killings.

R.I. prison official found to be tardy on fire safety deadlines

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — A federal judge yesterday found Rhode Island's director of corrections in contempt of court for failing to meet deadlines for fire safety improvements to the Adult Correctional Institutions.

"We are at the point of no return," said U.S. District Judge Raymond J. Pettine. "It is time to assess personal responsibility."

Pettine gave state Corrections Director John J. Moran 60 days to finish fire safety renovations in cellblocks M-N-O-P-Q-R in the ACI's old maximum security prison.

At that time, Pettine said he will hold a hearing to assess the work and decide on sanctions against Moran.

Pettine ordered Moran to submit a report a week before the hearing on progress in renovating the grey stone prison built in 1874, which houses 280 inmates.

The old maximum security section is one of seven state prison facilities which make up the ACI in Cranston and house a total of 1,160 inmates.

State can now force dying man to testify in murder trial

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — A Superior Court judge yesterday ruled the state may take a deposition from reputed New England crime boss Raymond L.S. Patriarca for its case in a murder conspiracy trial.

Last week, Superior Court Judge Joseph F. Rodgers refused to subpoena Patriarca to testify, saying he is so ill that a court appearance would "present a clear and present danger of death."

Prosecutor David Leech said the state may take the deposition next week from Patriarca, who lives in Johnston and is suffering from heart disease and diabetes.

Superior Court Judge Francis Kiely granted the state's request for the deposition for the trial of Louis Manocchio. He is charged with conspiring to murder Rudolph Marfeo and Anthony Melei in 1968. The victims were shot down gangland-style in a Providence grocery.

Patriarca was convicted of conspiring to murder Marfeo and was paroled from the Adult Correctional Institutions in Cranston in 1975 after serving more than four years of a 10-year sentence.

Ex-Building Authority member may return

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

A self-proclaimed 'whistle blower' who served on the University of Massachusetts Building Authority from 1964 to 1978 has received a letter from Governor Michael S. Dukakis that says he is under consideration for the Authority's next vacancy.

Evan Johnston said he decided to leave the UMass Building Authority after his second seven-year term because he did not believe the incoming Governor Edward King administration would be conducive to a positive atmosphere for correcting the various construction problems on the Amherst campus.

Working in conjunction with Ward Commission recommendations which he helped initiate, Johnston was one of the leaders in the struggle to force the University to address the problems with the Campus Center, Campus Center Garage and Tower Library. It turned out that the King administration did not act on the Ward Commission and Johnston said no Building Authority members have tried to make policy changes since 1978.

Newspapers, Johnston said, were a greater source of information on building matters than the president's office and other University officials.

Johnston said the deteriorating steam line leading to Southwest Residential Area is only the latest in a series of poorly designed structures on the UMass campus. Johnston also said he knew nothing of the problem with the steam line until reading yesterday's Collegian.

"No one told me the steam pipe only had a life of 20 years. That's something that should have been discussed before the complex was built. If that was the only way they could have heated Southwest they (the University) should have either held it (construction) up, or built a different complex," Johnston said.

University construction, Johnston said, has continually been plagued by lack of funds, communication and planning. Better lines of communication are needed within the University with regard to construction, he said.

UMass should have taken action on garage construction hazards, Campus Center roof leaks and the problem with falling bricks at the Tower Library long ago, Johnston said.

"I've always been afraid that nothing will happen unless someone gets hurt," he said, citing as an example the fact that no action was taken on the Campus Center Garage until a chunk of concrete fell damaging a car in the mid 1970's.

"(UMass) should think about what we can do right this moment to get power to the entire complex (Southwest). They should be thinking about it now, not next December," he said.

The UMass Building Authority is comprised of three members of the Board of Trustees, three citizens at large and three alumni. Johnston said he expects an opening to occur in about a year. He also said he fully expects to be chosen to fill the vacancy.

Chicken barbeque cancelled due to muddy field condition DC will serve normal menu

By ERIC LEHAN
Collegian Staff

Because of muddy field conditions, the All-Campus Barbecue scheduled for tomorrow has been cancelled. Instead, broiled chicken halves will be served as part of a normal Dining Commons menu.

Despite forecasts for fair weather, organizer Victor Keedy said yesterday's rain would leave the Southwest area fields too muddy for the number of people and vehicles expected to participate in the event.

Last year's barbecue may have unofficially broken the world record for the largest barbecue by serving 8,134 people in a three hour period, but Food Service representative Charlotte Williams said that the barbecue happened too late in the year to make the 1983 book.

According to the Guinness World Book of Records, the largest barbecue was one held on March 28-29, 1981 by the Pasco Sertoma Club of New Port Richey, Florida, at which 10,335 people were served.

A bone of contention for the title is the Sertoma Club's three-day event warrants a different classification than the All-Campus Barbecue, which was held in only three hours.

The 10,000 pieces of chicken purchased for the event is not considered an unusually large purchase by the Food Services purchasing department. The chicken halves will be served Wednesday with tossed salad, macaroni and cheese, and ice cream sundaes.

Students may sit on Regents if bill passes this summer

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

A student member of the Board of Regents of Higher Education could be seated by next January if a bill now in the Massachusetts Senate Ways and Means Committee is passed by the Legislature this summer, said Paul Gosselin, chair of the Undergraduate Student Senate Committee on Public Policy.

The Ways and Means Committee is the last step for any bill before it is voted on in the Legislature, and Gosselin said students will be making a big final lobbying effort tomorrow to move the bill out on to the floor of the Legislature.

The Public Policy Committee has introduced a similar bill for the past few years, but Gosselin thinks this year's version has a better chance of success, especially if the lobbying effort is strong.

"Just by talking to different legislators in the house and and senate, there isn't much opposition (to the bill)," Gosselin said. "The only real opposition is from some of the regents."

"The problem is just getting it out on the floor," Gosselin said. Public Policy Committee members hoped to have the bill voted on before June, but problems with the state budget could delay the process, he said.

"Ways and means is all screwed up because Dukakis overbudgeted this year," Gosselin said. "Both House and Senate Ways and Means have to go back and cut the budget. This prevents ways and means from acting on the (Regents) bill until after the budget."

Gosselin said the bill, now called Senate Bill 328, was favorably reported out of the State Joint Committee on Education in April, and he expects the Senate Ways and Means Committee to give it a favorable recommendation as well.

"I'm pretty confident it will pass in the few weeks that they hold sessions after the budget, or definitely in the fall," but we're going to have to make a big push to get it out of the committee," Gosselin said.

Adding a student to the Board of Regents is only one step of a three-step process to make the board more accountable to student needs, Gosselin said. The bill would also require that all gubernatorial appointees to the board be approved by the Joint Committee on Education, and would prohibit appointment of individuals who are principally employed by private institutions, he said.

"The Board of Regents is the highest authority on higher education in the state," Gosselin said. "It is important to have student representation on the board that most directly affects them."

UMass Public Safety enters the computer age for progress

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Department of Public Safety is coming of age.

The department comprising the police force, housing security and the parking office, has begun progress to computerize its records, keeping up with the high technology world quickly building around it.

Lawrence G. Holmes, assistant director of public safety, said, however, that the department has "only touched the surface of computers."

The department's data processing equipment "is the most efficient way to process any type of information," he said, though the system only has programs for crimes, bicyles, traffic citations, towings and investigation (dispatches).

Data processing is necessary, he said "in order to efficiently assign, plan and deploy personnel."

Holmes, who designed the first of the five computer programs in 1977, said the computers "allow us to handle and extract information usable by our personnel. We are not interested in standard deviance but whether one man can handle a job in a specific location and at a specific time."

The department uses two systems, an online system which consists of a video terminal on which information is displayed and can be modified, and a batch mode system, comprising cards that are key punched and brought to the Graduate Research Center computer where the data is printed on hard copy printouts. The online system runs out of a larger Whitmore computer.

Only the parking ticket data is run through the batch mode system at the Graduate Research Center. Plans are in the works to move the system to Whitmore soon, Holmes said.

All the computerized information tabulated yearly and documented in monthly and annual reports has been since 1977, Holmes said. He said he could not understand how the department could propose a budget to the UMass administration before that time because it lacked organized, coherent facts.

"You can't do that manually. There were 27,000 responses last year. It doesn't look good at all not to use them (the computers), especially with our resources. The person having that information available is the one who will benefit," said Holmes, who taught himself to use and program the computer system.

The cost to lease time and space on the IBM CRT 3270 the department uses through Whitmore amounts to no more than "a couple of grand a year," Holmes said.

The GRC computer time is cheaper because "you do most of the work yourself," he said.

Holmes said he would like to see the department obtain video terminals for every office.

"I'd like to grow into property and inventory control," he said noting the possibility of improvement in the lost and found office. "It would give us a quicker look (at an item) and we would be able to key in (on locating an object)," he said.

"The age of technology is here," Holmes said. "If you cannot grow with the time and improve yourself, you have to get out of the business."

Female minister advocates change

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

An Amherst minister who participated in a 14-day hunger strike to help pass the Equal Rights Amendment said non-violent direct action is a constructive and peaceful way of showing people that one is serious about an issue.

The Reverend Donna Schaper, a minister at the Amherst First Congregational Church for the past three years who is leaving to take a new position in Chicago, has been active in civil disobedience actions and the feminist movement. She fasted in Illinois in an attempt to help ratify the Equal Rights Amendment in 1981 and since being ordained in the United Church of Christ in Tuscon, Arizona in 1972, Schaper worked in urban areas counseling rape victims before coming to Amherst.

Despite what she calls sexist, racist and violent passages in the Bible Schaper said there is very little sexism in the Congregational Church which has been ordaining women since 1837. Sexism still exists but not on the issue of whether or not a woman should be ordained, she said.

Schaper says she is upset with how tele-evangelists like Jerry Falwell and Jimmy Swaggart handle the Bible.

"They have false interpretations of the Bible and are clearly hiding behind the skirts of the Bible for their own reactionary political views," she said.

Schaper also said the tele-evangelists use the Bible as a document of guilt rather than grace.

She described her new job as being a "fancy job for a woman."

"It's hard for women to get big church jobs and high salaries but that's changing," she said.

Schaper will work as the director of the Urban Academy of Chicago training people to work in urban ministry's.

"I like working with poor people," Schaper said. "Amherst is the most middle class situation I've ministered in and I don't feel I'm doing what I should be doing."

Schaper has worked in urban areas with poor and minority populations in Tuscon, Philadelphia and New Haven.

The Reverend is expecting a baby on June 1st and has no idea how it will affect her work.

"I'll probably work less than I do now and have a different kind of life but I still intend to work full-time," she said.

Woman evades detective in robbery

By DAVID B. MINER
Collegian Staff

One of two shoplifting incidents this weekend at the Price Chopper on University Drive left a store-detective with minor injuries after a suspect allegedly hit the detective with her car while fleeing from the store's parking lot. Police said the detective observed a woman placing groceries in her handbag, who left the store without paying for them.

When the detective confronted the woman in the parking lot, she told the detective that she was pregnant and got into her car, police said. When she drove off, police said she hit the detective, knocking him to the ground.

Police said the woman was driving an automobile reported to be stolen in Chicopee. The items stolen from the supermarket — two cans of crab meat and a pork roast — are estimated to be worth approximately $16.

Police were also called to Price Chopper at 5:50 p.m. Friday to arrest a 20-year-old male for shoplifting. The suspect had been detained by the store detective after he allegedly left the store without paying for eight packages of cigarettes.

In other police action, Amherst police say a University of Massachusetts student was arrested on Saturday and charged with petty larceny and breaking and entering. According to police, the student stole a sign from a local restaurant and broke into the garage of Saint Bridget's Church to evade capture.

Info session being held about Fullbright grants

A preliminary information session for those interested in applying for a Fulbright grant to support graduate work or research abroad will be held at 7 p.m. today in room 301 Herter Hall.

Applicants must be U.S. citizens who will hold a bachelor's degree before the beginning date of the grant and who are — in most cases — proficient in the language of the host country.

Selection for grant, which is paid by the United States government, is based on the applicant's academic record, the quality of the proposed study plan, knowledge of the language and culture of the country involved and personal qualifications.

Applications for the anticipated 500 grants for the 1984-85 year must be submitted by October 17. For more information, contact Professor Joseph Lake, the campus Fulbright advisor, at 545-0901 or in 437 Herter.

Tuning to Walkman while driving is illegal

While not many students may realize it, wearing Walkman or other stereo headphones while operating a motor vehicle is illegal, and the offense could land the driver a $25 fine, Amherst police said.

Wearing headphones while driving is illegal unless the headphones "are used for communication in connection with controlling the course or the movements of the vehicle," according to Massachusetts statute chapter nine, section 13.

The State Police and Registry of Motor Vehicles officers have reportedly been enforcing the law, but some local police have temporarily resorted to giving verbal warnings to drivers listening to Walkman and other portable stereos with headphones.

Amherst Police officer Michael Sullivan said he felt bad about writing tickets when people are unaware of the law.

"With the warm weather many people, especially students, have started driving while listening to tunes," Sullivan said. "They don't realize they'll get a ticket for it."

Sullivan said only two $25 tickets have been issued in Amherst this spring to his knowledge — one Saturday evening to a woman who was unsure of the law.

Man falls four floors and comes away unhurt

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN

University of Massachusetts police arrested a 19-year-old Ware man Saturday and charged him with being a disorderly person and assault and battery on a police officer in connection with an incident on University Drive.

Police said the man was observed walking in the middle of the road around 9:40 p.m. Saturday, forcing vehicles to veer into the southbound lane of University Drive.

When police arrived, he started a fist fight with them, striking an officer, police said yesterday.

In other police action:

● A man fell to the ground from a fourth floor Cance balcony but sustained no injuries shortly before 4 a.m. Saturday, police said.

When police arrived, the man was found conscious but disoriented. Amherst Fire Department Emergency Medical Technicians transported the man to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital after splinting an arm, wrist and hand for possible fracture.

Police said they were unsure of the cause of the fall.

● A 19-year-old Weston man was arrested at 6:39 p.m. Saturday and charged with having no license on his person and having no registration in possession. He received motor vehicle citations for unlawful escape of smoke, unlawful design of an exhaust system, and harsh and unreasonable noise.

Police said the man was observed driving on Massachusetts Ave., producing an excess amount of smoke and noise from the exhaust area of his car.

● A 20-year-old John F. Kennedy dormitory student from Worcester was arrested and charged yesterday with possession of marijuana and being a disorderly person, police said.

Police said they responded to a call at 4:27 a.m. yesterday complaining of a party with loud noise. When police arrived they discovered an undisclosed amount of marijuana and three pipes on a desk in the man's room, police said.

● Police arrested a 17-year-old Pembroke man at 1:38 a.m. Saturday. They charged him with having no license in his possession and failing to use care at an intersection. The man was observed driving erratically on Clark Hill Road, police said.

● A 22-year-old Hampshire College student was arrested at 12:17 a.m. Saturday and charged with driving while under the influence of alcohol and operating a motor vehicle without a license. Police said the man was observed driving south on Commonwealth Ave. in an erratic manner.

● An AM/FM stereo cassette player was reported stolen Saturday from a car parked in Lot 49, police said. The radio, valued at $350, and four wheel covers, valued at $500, were stolen sometime Friday, police said.

● An AM/FM stereo cassette player and 200 watt equalizer were reported stolen from a car in Lot 22. The two items, valued at $289 were last seen Wednesday, police said.

● A man sustained abrasions to his hand and face in connection with a fight outside Dickinson dormitory lobby Sunday morning, police said. The man was allegedly beat on by four other men who said the individual had thrown bottles at them.

The man's roommate joined the fight later, police said. No arrests were made. The man was treated at the Infirmary.

Aussies take pride in their beaches, surf, and nudity

Editor's note: This is the final of a series of articles by Collegian reporter Richard Martin who is spending the spring semester in Australia's Queensland state.

By RICHARD MARTIN
Collegian Staff

BRISBANE, AUSTRALIA — To understand Australians, one must first appreciate their love and pride of their world-famous beaches.

Just as Americans would discuss their favorite baseball teams, Aussies are vocal in their devotion to their "home" beaches. It is safe to say that anyone who tried to analyze Australian culture without taking beaches into account would be drawing an incomplete picture.

This is more readily understood when you realize that Australians — particularly Queenslanders — live and swim on the beaches 10 months of the year. In addition, each group of beaches has its own natural characteristics and culture that distinguish it from others.

The surf on the Australian beaches, which is claimed to be among the best in the world, averages at about five feet, peaking to about ten feet in Brisbane.

Many world-class surfing competitions are held near Brisbane because the contour of the coast enables surfers to have a "long ride."

However, dangerous undertows and rip currents — strong enough to overpower a lifesaving boat — plague the waters of the beaches.

Sharks are also attracted to the warm Australian waters and lifeguards occassionally put "shark alerts" into effect.

"When you get out about 100 yards from shore for the good waves, you can sometimes see shark fins cruising around," one surfer said. "We usually won't come in, though, unless there are four or five of them.

"If there is just one, then he will leave us alone. Chances are he is just curious."

Australians lifeguards are in charge of watching out for sharks and monitoring the water for dangerous currents. They enter the water an average of three times a day, usually to aid a swimmer who drifts toward a rip current.

Surfers — or "skegs" as they are sometimes called — form clubs that spend their days and evenings together on the beaches. The clubs are easily identified by similar haircuts, bathing suits or surf boards.

While each group surfs on its own territory, there are very few conflicts between the different groups.

Surprisingly enough, all Australian beaches permit nude bathing. Half of the beaches set aside a particular area for nude bathers. Either you put a bathing suit on or you don't at the other beaches. Australians can't understand why Americans get upset over public nudity or profanity. Four-letter words are quite common on the TV and radio.

The typical Australian attitude is, "If you want to wear a bathing suit, fine. If you don't want to, that's fine too. What difference does it make?"

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Growing out of Spring Concerts

I really didn't go to this past weekend's "Mystery Series" concerts on the pond. I drove over at about noon on Saturday with my roommates and listened to the music for a few minutes while I stood enjoying the bright sunlight and watching the crowd. But I left after about 20 minutes and went home to do my laundry.

It's not that I didn't like the music. I think that I'm one of the few people that wasn't disappointed by this year's choice of spring event bands. I like Roy Buchanan, Edgar Winter and Gary "U.S." Bonds. And I was looking forward to hearing Nona Hendryx, Melba Moore and the Preston Porter Band.

Scott Hersey

I guess I just don't care anymore. Instead of getting drunk and watching the bands, I did my laundry, typed two cover letters and read a book.

For me, Spring Concert used to be a big event. My first spring concert was the Patti Smith/Grateful Dead show in 1979. I was kind of young then, and dove into it with the full enthusiasm of a freshman at his first big show. I drank a lot of beer, smoke a lot of dope and for the first and only time in my life took a quaalude. And like a lot of other people at their first show of this type, I just about passed out before the Dead came on and I had to stagger back to my dorm and go to bed.

My second show was the Bonnie Raitt/Allman Brothers concert in 1980. My floor and I planned this one intricately, and showed up at the stadium at about 9 a.m. with a full load of ice, sandwiches and various kinds of alcohol. We spent the whole day singing, dancing and eating. We had a great time and all staggered back to the dorm to pass out at about 7 p.m.

I even went to the last stadium show in 1981. Although a lot of people were bummed out at the talent (Bonnie Raitt again) and boycotted the show, I went and had a good time. It was a beautiful day, and between trips to the beer stand for 16-ounce drafts, I watched the bands and walked around to talk to friends and just enjoyed the festival atmosphere.

I thought last year's Pond Series shows were great. I went to all three days of shows. The weekend was sunny, there were no big names but the music was fine and the atmosphere was super. I remember coming down from Orchard Hill on the last day, seeing 5,000 people dancing to Toots and the Maytals and running to get in the middle of it.

Together, these shows have given me some fine memories that will stay with me for the rest of my life. I was looking forward to my last concert this past weekend. I was going to get very drunk and walk around to talk to everyone I could find.

Saturday was a bright sunny day. Warm, but not hot enough to be bothersome. But I knew as soon as I woke up that I didn't want to go.

I drove in anyway, and for a while I watched the groups of people coming up from Southwest and down from Orchard Hill with their sandwiches and beer.

I tried to force myself to enjoy the day, walking around and talking to friends, even having a drink. But it just wouldn't come.

It was a disappointment to realize it, but I was more at home typing than partying.

I guess I'm ready to leave.

Lavender is self-defeating

To the Editor:

Last Friday I was pleased to see that so many people wanted to show their support for gay people by carrying around balloons. It was a positive act and there are not nearly enough of them. Yet, at the same time, I was very much bothered by the fact that few stopped to think about the implications that the lavender balloons held. The sterotypical image of gay men is that they are flittery, limp-wristed and wear a lot of lavender, while gay women are pictured as brutes who also wear a lot of lavender.

Now, I have nothing against the color, but choosing it as a symbol of gay people is ludicrous. It makes as much sense as blacks and their supporters carrying around signs with watermelons on them, during the Civil Rights Movement. The color just reinforces the ridiculous idea that so many still hold. Homosexuality is a sexual preference, not a lifestyle and gay people are not all alike. The image of "lavender" people is limiting and repressive and, frankly, many gay people were insulted by the balloons. The effort of the PGA to create awareness of what homosexuality is, was unfortunately, greatly self-defeating. I suggest to the PGA that they in the future get rid of the lavender balloons.

Helping to prevent racism

To the Editor:

On the afternoon of the 31st of March, around 6 p.m., as I proceeded to leave Hampshire Commons on my way to my dorm, I was verbally attacked by a person who had the guts to scream "SPICK!" at me, but wasn't brave enough to show his face. Anyhow, the person screamed at me from a room in Coolidge. Since I consider this insult an offense not only to me, but to my cultural background, I contacted the Head of Residence, and demanded an apology from the offenders.

I do not wish to harm the offender(s) legally or academically; I just want to bring to the attention of the University Administration the unawareness of racial conflicts.

We are all students in search of a higher education, but how are we supposed to get a "higher" education if apparently we do not have any education at all? This is not the first case, and unfortunately, it probably won't be the last, but I only hope that the rest of the "un-educated" population of the University will learn something from the letter I have received from the inhabitants of that room in Coolidge.

Editor's Note: The letter in reference was from the residents of the room in Coolidge, who apologized for the actions of the people in their room who shouted the obscenity. The students accepted not the blame for the incident, but, more importantly, the responsibility of helping to prevent other incidents of racism on campus.

Fireworks — not just for fun

Fireworks can provide much merriment in the night — a flash, a bang and brilliant colors. No matter how old the person, fireworks can draw out a child-like sense of amazement of the explosive noisemakers.

Fireworks can also kill. Since 1980, 22 Americans have lost their lives from mishandling or malfunctioning of pyrotechnics, according to The National Injury Information Clearinghouse in Washington, D.C. The average age of those victims was 23.7 years — old enough to know better, right? Apparently not.

As Americans usher in the next New Year with flurries of pyrotechnic displays nationwide, more than 11,000 people will have injured themselves with fireworks, according to the Clearinghouse. And as graduation nears, some may feel the urge to "light up."

In fact, more than 1,600 of these were to victims' eyes. Ironic isn't it that the device designed to create a borealic display of visual excitement ends in an individual's loss of sight?

As a member of the UMass community who doesn't like to see people mutilate themselves and who doesn't like to see people suffer the consequences of judicial action — which could very likely result from a violation of the Code of Student Conduct which prohibits possession or use of explosives in the residence halls — and as a person who has a legal obligation to do so by virtue of just such a violation, I warn you to exercise extreme caution when handling fireworks. Do not use explosive devices on University property. Do not hoist yourself by your own petard.

Amherst — the summer oasis

Apartment for Rent, Summer Sublet, Houses for Rent — pick up any newspaper in the area and the classified advertising just seems to scream at you. On any given day there have been at least 100 such ads in the Hampshire Gazette and easily 80 in the Collegian. There is one interesting category however, that is often neglected by the potential renter seeking to escape dormitory claustrophobia. You'll find it right near these ads but it is a much, much smaller set of ads in comparison, this is because these ads are the help wanted's.

This is the summer plight of any person that chooses to make the Pioneer Valley their summer abode. Sometimes this situation cannot be helped because most landlords will only lease their properties on twelve month leases and jobs are just hard to come by in the summer.

Chris Ferretti

A friend of mine is in perhaps an ideal situation. He and his roommates it seems, have asked their landlady for permission to break their lease and leave at the end of May and permission was granted to them.

Unfortunately, most people are not that lucky. In fact, they must not only stay for twelve months but they are even paying for their last month ahead of time. It has become standard practice for all rented housing in this area to pay first and last month's rents and a security deposit to the landlord.

This deposit may be refunded, but it is only at the discretion of the landlord — but at least there is a chance that some of that money will come back to you when your lease is up.

The problem still exists for not just the graduating senior, but for the off campus renter; how does one get rid of the apartment for those last three months of the lease?

Some people are ingenious in their attempts. They promise finder's fees, or a rent reduction, others, a case of beer for the chance to pick up those last months.

In the space of a simple classified ad, people will try to show why their Presidential, Puffton, Riverglade, or Colonial Village apartments are more attractive, closer to campus, nearer to the bus routes than the rest. That is the American way — when you are stuck in a ridiculous situation, there is very little that you can do except find ways to make it sound better.

For the off-campus speculator, now is the time to rent or sublet from the tenant, because there will be little time to find a place to live that first week in September. Remember, for every good idea you may have, such as not bothering to find a place now for the fall, there will be just as many in the same boat that first week of classes in the fall.

For some people this decision can be a pretty simple one. You get together with a couple of friends and rent an apartment at one of the complexes or an entire house. That is simple enough and because you do know your roommate, chances are pretty good that things will work out. That does not always happen however, because sometimes you do not have this comfort or even four friends. Sometimes you must find a place by yourself, and that can be difficult.

Look at those ads, do not be desperate — it is your time of the year to pick and choose. Only remember, jobs are scarce and what jobs remain will not always complement your advanced degree, such as a fry-o-later chef or a head dishwasher.

It is a desperate situation in a desperate job area but this is a great area to spend a summer, without ninety-five cars on East Pleasant Street at nine in the morning. And it is worth spending the time here to find a good house, besides in a year or so you can run your own Summer Sublet, Apartment for Rent ad.

Dance original and energetic

AGAINST ALL ODDS:
THREE CHOREOGRAPHERS AT WORK
Friday, May 13
Saturday, May 14
Hampden Theatre, UMass
8:00 p.m.

By FRED STEINWAY
Collegian Staff

"I really don't like classification," said Fiona Marcotty. "I guess I'd like to call it new dance." Marcotty, UMass student Ariel Weiss and Hampshire College graduate Jill Esterson presented their choreography at Hampden Theatre Friday and Saturday. It was announced that Marcotty would not perform with the group due to a sprained ankle.

The performances were unusual, energetic, fresh and original. "Although my work is after Cunningham, with its use of everyday movement, I feel uncomfortable calling it Post-Modern," said Jill Esterson.

Esterson performed her solo composition "Whatever You Do Don't Stop Moving" to a spoken score by German poet Kurt Schwitters that sounded like nonstop scat-singing. Esterson moved with an energy and exuberance that appeared to work at the limits of what a body can express. The dancer crossed and recrossed the stage, seeming to fill the limited space with as much movement as it could hold.

Esterson once used freeze-frame arm motions with exquisite lightness and precision. At one point the dancer jumped into the air, arms above her head in a startling thumbs-out gesture.

Esterson has been working with very brief choreographies she calls miniatures. The group performed some of these Friday night. Mostly from 3 seconds to four minutes in length, "miniatures" allow the choreographer to try out a dance idea, which then may be built into a longer work.

"Miniatures are like doing jester drawings if you're an artist — those sketch drawings that capture a sense of the way a person moves," commented Esterson.

Dancers perform one of Fiona Marcotty's choreographies.

"I think dance is very far behind music in terms of using structures," said Esterson. "The choreography of Twyla Tharp (a well-known contemporary choreographer) is very musical. She manipulates choreography the way a composer constructs a score," she said. Esterson studied briefly with Twyla Tharp.

The choreographers developed their material by meeting as a group once a week and working in an improvisory way. "After a while we get very good at forecasting where the others will be at any given moment," said Esterson.

Fiona Marcotty is working with "highly rhythmic structures, using a limited movement vocabulary," according to Marcotty. "The dances are sort of mathematically based, the same movements set at different rhythms against other," said Marcotty. Her work "Downdance: Version I" made an unusual use of timed handclaps and rhythmic layering.

Dances by Ariel Weiss, grouped under the title "Forever, Again, Still," were dedicated to the dancer's father. "Trio" was set to music by Manhattan artist Laurie Anderson, "Walking and Falling." Dancers moved about the space in harmonic groupings, sometimes in synchrony, at others slipping into polyphony. An individual dancer often played off against a separate group. "Quintet" was set to Laurie Anderson's tape, "Born, Never Asked."

Outside Hampden Theater a glassed-in showcase displayed photographs of the choreographers at work. Written and color-coded scores for the dances looked like football plans, and rows of digital lights. The case also exhibited photographs of the choreographers at work.

The UMass English Department's production of Mary Magdalene, which was to have been presented yesterday afternoon has been postponed. The 16th century saint's play has been rescheduled to 4 p.m. Wednesday, May 18, and will still be performed outdoors by the Campus Pond. Pictured above are Vince DiMarco and Jane Carter, who star as the King and Queen of Marseilles.

Animals come out of the woods

LONDON (AP) — The Animals, that group of rhythm and blues musicians who pounced on American rock fans at the peak of the British music invasion in the mid-'60's, are reuniting after a 17-year separation.

"It's kill or cure," says Eric Burdon, the band's lead singer, whose boiling renditions of "The House of the Rising Sun" and "Boom Boom" helped make the group one of the most popular British bands at that time.

"We've got a millionaire, a factory supervisor, an unemployed Buddhist, a composer and me," he says. "But I think we can make it work because we've got a lot of experience and maturity going for us this time. And we sound good."

The Animals broke up on a sour note in 1966, ravaged by the rigors of the road and plagued be personal feuds.

But before they called it quits, they had left their mark in the music world. In 1964 alone, they turned out three albums and six singles, and made three major tours that guitarist Hilton Valentine, 39, recalled "left us all totally on the ropes emotionally and physically."

Between 1963-66, the Animals had 10 hits that made the Top Ten around the world, including the classic, "Rising Sun" in June 1964, which became their anthem.

After the band split, Burdon went on to sing with the funky American rock group, War.

It was an agent, Rod Weinstein, who was able to cajole the Animals into a reunion. They jammed one recent morning borrowed equipment in a chilly club in Newcastle, and found they could still make good music together.

"We played for three days, despite the cold and lousy equipment," said Alan Price, who plays keyboards. "I found I wasn't as clever as I thought I was, but that was OK because the music was good."

The band - Burdon, Price, bass Chas Chandler, Drummer Johnny Steel and Valentine - is kicking off its ambitious return with a world tour which will start in the United States in July. The concert tour will take them to Japan, Austrailia and Europe. They plan to film their concerts to make what Burdon called "something like The Band's 'Last Waltz.'"

The Animals have recorded six new songs and hope to release an album later this year.

Commencement 1983
10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 28
University of Massachusetts at Amherst

Instruction for Participants

All Candidates
There will be no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 28, 1983. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college.

Who is Eligible to Participate?

Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1983. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master's degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 29, 1983 to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 29, 1983. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTHWEST end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities/Information Center and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early to ensure good seating. Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each undergraduate/graduate student will receive a packet of six formal invitations. Students are urged to encourage their guests to arrive early for good seating.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods

Undergraduate Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Master's Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., upon presentation of an I.D. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each Ph.D. candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the university will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A251 Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $26. (Five College Doctoral Hoods will be available at $42.95.)

Rentals for Faculty
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their rental orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS WEDNESDAY, MAY 18. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds if apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Szelewicki at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for Friday before Commencement. A limited number of rooms in University housing will be available for relatives and other guests the nights of May 27 and 28. Please contact the University Summer Conference Office, 918 Campus Center, 545-3400, by May 10. Fees: $15 single/$21 double, per night. There is a $5 cash key deposit — to be returned when the key is returned.

Food Services
Coffee, soft drinks, and donuts will be available under the east (section 16) and west (section 6) stands at the north end of the stadium.

Plate, Valley Girls, Ex. Science - muddy champs

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Yesterday afternoon was a good time to sit inside and watch reruns of MASH and dare not venture outside into the steady rain.

However, despite lousy field conditions and a steady rain, the four intramural softball championships were held.

Plate toppled BKO for the men's league title, 8-3, Valley Girls overwhelmed Mary Lyons 7-2, in the women's league, Exercise Science took the Grad-Fac crown with a tight 2-1 win over the Mauleurs and also won the co-rec title with another 2-1 squeaker over the Untouchables.

According to intramural department officials, the games had to be played today and the forecast was for more rain today. So, instead of letting the fields get worse, they played yesterday.

Plate, led by the pitching of Tom Murphy, took a quick 5-0 lead over BKO. Fine play by Chris Storey and Bart Bartlow kept Plate ahead for good. Plate finished at 11-0.

"It was our tough defense," said Murphy. "We were solid and consistent. We definitely hustled." Dennis Murphy and Dave Fiorini displayed that hustle sliding across home (all mud) in the fifth.

Valley Girls also went up 5-0 before three time defending champion Mary Lyons knew what was going on. Valley Girls (9-0) cruised from there to post a 7-2 victory.

"It was a revenge game for us," said player-manager Ann Donlan, who went three for three. "Everybody played well despite the weather conditions."

Sue Packard smacked a triple in the first inning to set the stage. Nancy Frye, Patti Smith, and Chris Fairenny also played well for the victors.

Exercise Science pulled out two tough wins. In the co-rec game, led by the stellar play of Joanne Douglas (3b), who drove in the winning run, and Jeff Ives, Exercise Science (8-0) made their two run first inning stand up.

"A lot of people got dirty," said a happy Ives. "It was definitely slippery."

Exercise Science completed the sweep by also taking the Grad-Fac title over the Mauleurs. The grad-fac team scored in the fourth and fifth.

★ Crew

zcuk, co-captain Dean Bennett, catcher Butch LeBlanc, utilityman Justin Brown, and pitchers Dave Valdanbrini and Adam Grossman. But the rest will be returning and as next season rolls around after spring break the baseball team will be looking to capture the ECAC playoffs. One thing is for sure, it may be better, but it probably won't be as exciting as this year.

★ Baseball

"I was drunk when I went to bed so when I woke up this morning, I had to get out of bed and find the medal and put it on to prove to myself that I wasn't dreaming," I heard Joe telling head coach Dave "Cook" Kumlin Sunday. "Boy, this feels good."

The team decided to all wear their medals on Sunday so if anybody saw Charlie Lawrence, Ted Millet, Tom Martin or any of the others that day, you saw the red, white and blue ribbon with the silver weight hanging from their necks. They were that proud of their accomplishment.

If you didn't see them and you would like to, just ask one of the members of the boat. They'll show you. Or, look for Joe. He's probably still got his on. He's that proud of it.

So am I, in case you couldn't tell.

Loftis takes 3rd in Easterns

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Sophomore Leah Loftis broke the school record twice in the 400 meters enroute to a third place finish in the Eastern track championships at Georgetown University this past weekend.

The relay team of Loftis, freshman Debbie Smith, sophomore Maureen O'Reilly, and freshman Susan Bird also set a school record and placed sixth.

"We accomplished what we wanted to do," said a very pleased head coach Kalenkeni Banda. "Everybody ran well. This is a young team. There are some good things coming up."

Loftis took third with a time of 55.8 for the quarter mile. She also ran a speedy 52.9 to pace the relay team to their record time of 3:53.7.

"Leah is one of the top athletes that has come here," said Banda.

This ends a very fine season for the lady tracksters and with all of the underclassmen on the team, Banda can look forward to more record setting and a strong team the next two or three years.

UMass started off slow blazed to the finish

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

While most of us returned from spring break either with a deep, full tan or mulling over the fact that we haven't found a job yet, the University of Massachusetts men's baseball team was returning from a trip to California, starting off their season by playing some of the best teams in college baseball.

The Minutemen finished that trip at 2-6, and welcomed a return to the Northeast, where they play teams of their own caliber. Little did they know that this 1983 season would be a twisting, turning ride, where chaos and excitement were the name of the game.

UMass came into the season already hampered by injuries. Keith Lovellette and Tim Foster, two people the team hoped to see play, were set down with injuries during the off-season. Graduation produced such losses as star Warren McReddie (.394, 7HR, 29 RBI) and Brian Finnigan (.347). So UMass needed some help not only offensively, but defensively as well.

Looking to improve on their 14-20-1 record of last year, the Minutemen started on the road at Yale University. A tough 6-5 loss started UMass on a 4 game losing streak. The team reached a season low losing to Holy Cross 4-1, in a game where they committed 5 errors and saw their team batting average dip to .227.

But head coach Dick Bergquist knew there was something different about this team. He saw what he called "unusual team spirit" in this club. This spirit translated to 14 wins out of the last 17 games and an ECAC playoff birth.

Ironically, the turn around started with a victory over the Huskies at UConn (the team they would eventually lose to in the playoffs). Doubleheader splits with Ivy Leaguers Harvard and Brown showed that the team was starting to win. The question would be over the next few weeks if they would stop winning.

A sweep of Northeastern at home not only started the Minutemen on their tear, it also was the scene for a new edition in the UMass record books, as right fielder Chris Waszcuk would break the home run record of eight. He belted one in each of the two victories. It also marked five home runs in five games for the senior.

The team liked the idea of winning, so they went on to take nine of their next ten. The pitching staff was the main force during this stretch, allowing only 29 runs in those ten games. They even posted doubleheader shutouts over Northeastern and Rhode Island.

The climax of their winning streak came in comeback victories over Fairfield and UConn, again with senior co-captain Bruce Emerson earning the nickname "Mr. Clutch" by knocking in the game winning runs, both with two outs. The next game, however, was a crucial loss for the Minutemen, as they bowed to rival Providence 5-4, damaging their chances for a playoff bid.

A victory over AIC on May 6 put the Minutemen back on track but the big day came on the 7th, when they found out that they would be seeded number two in the ECAC playoffs at Pawtucket, Rhode Island. The regular season ended for UMass in a crazy doubleheader split with Dartmouth, where UMass won the first game on an Emerson (who else?) single, and lost the second game, 18-14, even though they scored ten runs in one inning.

But by then the playoffs were on their mind, as they traveled to McCoy Stadium to play UConn. They won that game 7-6, with Todd Comeau leading the club. But the season came to an abrupt end as a loss to Maine was coupled with a 7-6 heartbreaker to UConn. The 19-18 final record was in no way indicative of the teams performance.

There was no one leader for this club, but many leaders. "Waz" led the team with a .342 average and 11 homers, but he had plenty of help. Emerson, Comeau, third baseman Andy Conners and shortstop Angelo Salustri all hit above .290. The pitching staff posted the lowest ERA in three years, led by Emerson, Tony Presnal, Bob Kostro, and bullpen ace Matt Subocz.

Gone will be seniors Emerson, Waszc-

Proud JV crew takes second in Nationals

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Saturday night was just starting to turn into a blur when my brother, Joe Floyd, and two of his crewmates, Steve Arthur and Jim Holman came waltzing into Phi Mu wearing huge grins and the silver medals that signified that they and the rest of the UMass junior varsity eight had taken second at the Dad Vail.

So what, a lot of people might think. What's a Dad Vail?

JIM FLOYD

Well, the reason that wearing those silver medals meant so much is that the Dad Vail happens to be the national championship for Division II schools.

Oh yeah, the cynics might continue. That's Division II.

Don't try to tell those guys that. Crew, you see, is a very different sport. There are no real records. You don't speak of crew in terms of wins and losses during the course of the season. The real measure is the Dad Vail. All goals point toward the Dad Vail. The Dad Vail is it.

And, that puts some pretty heavy pressure on the oarsmen when they go to Philadelphia, where the almighty Vail is held.

Think about it. The crew team trains all year long. They start when school starts in the fall and train for one race, (you guessed it) the Dad Vail. That's nine months of training for just over six minutes of rowing. Two full semesters are compressed into 2000 meters of river.

And Joe, the captain of the team who is finishing up his fourth and final year of rowing for UMass, finally picked up a medal. It wasn't gold, granted, but that's not that hard to accept. So what, when you train for that long (For Joe and fellow seniors Kevin Ritchie and Steve Keoninger, it amounted to four years of preparation for their six minute run at the ribboned medallions) and you are able to get something back from it, then that's success.

"That was the best way it (his rowing career) could end," said Joe. "I've never been in a boat that went so well."

Unfortunately for the rest of the UMass boats, it didn't go so well. Only one other boat, the women's novice four, was able to advance past the initial round of competition and even that boat lost in the semifinals. High hopes of success, particularly in the gunnels of the men's varsity eight, were washed ashore amidst the rest of the pollution of Philly's Schukyl River.

But, that didn't happen to Joe and his boys. Edith Shillue, who while not being one of the boys per se, still plays an integral role as coxswain (the person who steers the boat, for you landlubbers), stayed cool as UMass came from fifth place at 800 meters to fourth at after 1500 to second in a photo finish at the final mark.

The Florida Institute of Technology took first but that didn't even faze Joe and company because when they got out of bed on Sunday they were still wearing those silver medals.

Sports Fanatic : Is it a second childhood ?

The definition is in Websters New World Dictionary. A fan (short for fanatic) is among other things, a lunatic, and a person affected by excessive enthusiasm.

I plead guilty on all charges. I am a sports fanatic, and have spent too much time defending myself and other sports enthusiasts for our obsession.

We as sports fans tend to treat the world and its many problems with just as much concern and doubt as non-sports fans, we just don't do it as often. We give meaning to the trivialities of sport, and it enriches our life by pushing back the societal and world troubles.

ELLIOTT KALB

Author and self proclaimed eccentric Bill James (The Baseball Abstract) writes, "...In the 1960's people who should have been carrying banners saying, 'Hit it Here Willie' and arguing about who should be National League Rookie of the Year got all wrapped in politics instead, and started carrying peace signs and worrying about evil and social injustice and stuff. Attendance suffered. And the nation with it."

That may be going a little bit too far. A bit.

The truth is more people share a commonality with sports than anything else. I can't say that knowing about astronomy or Latin or sociology will hurt, but I'd rather discuss the designated hitter rule or view one of Kareem's sky hooks for the one millionth time.

Most sports fans begin as children, when athletes are heroes and sports are all-consuming passions to young boys and girls. As these children reach high school and college age, frequently these sports fans lose interest or their interest fades for a while. Not me. Never happened. I still get excited when Topps, Inc. comes out with new editions of their baseball cards.

I mark time by the passing of seasons. Opening Day in baseball, Breakfast at Wimbledon, the World Series, college bowl games, the Super Bowl, the NCAA Tournament, and even the NBA and NHL championship series still create a sense of excitement and anticipation; or as David Letterman says, "More fun than humans should be allowed.

I suspect that there are many like myself. Some fans even go as far as taking an elitist position and will not admit it. Fortunately, there are plenty of unabashed sports fans. That is why there is at least a page devoted to sports everyday in the Collegian. That is why I had no problem persuading 17 sports fans from the Collegian and WMUA to stay up all night discussing, trading, and drafting college basketball teams with me before the NCAA college basketball tournament. That is why thousands of fans attend Minuteman games at Alumni Stadium, Curry Hicks Cage, and other campus athletic fields.

People ask me if I will need a woman who is as much a sports fan as myself (Applications now being accepted.) Seriously, it will be enough to understand my appreciation for sports. Anyone who will let me live out my childhood in my adulthood, will be good enough.

It is a Peter Pan fantasy life of never growing old, this business of being a sports fan. I wish to thank readers of my column here in the Collegian, and listeners and phone callers to the sports talk show — WMUA's Sports Cafe — for their interest. I also wish to thank friends and strangers who took the time over the last four years to talk sports with me after a class, over coffee at the Hatch, staying up late at the dorm, or in meeting at a party or a bar. Thank you for an obsession, for an admitted escapism.

There's nothing wrong with retaining a part of childhood. All I know is, if there is a God, Heaven looks an awful lot like Fenway Park.

Whitmore condemns student anti-King sentiment

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

Officials at the University of Massachusetts are opposed to proposals by several students that graduating seniors turn their backs while former Gov. Edward J. King is given an honorary degree at this year's commencement ceremony.

UMass President David C. Knapp said yesterday he "deplored" the suggested protest, calling it "uninformed," given King's record as governor.

"The University had several very good years, budgetarily, under Gov. King," Knapp said.

Robert H. Quinn, chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees, also said King's term had helped UMass, and called those who planned to turn their backs "prejudiced."

"They haven't been very observant," Quinn said. "King's budgets have been more beneficial to the University of Massachusetts than any governor since Foster Furcolo.

"I don't think that (turning their backs) is a very worthy action to express their point of view," Quinn said, but added, "It's a free country."

Quinn stressed King's efforts to create a "melding of business and education" during his term. "The high tech community looks to the University of Massachusetts" more than other institutions in the state, Quinn said, thanks to King's efforts.

Knapp, when asked if he considered the method of protest appropriate, said, "If one feels compelled to be boorish, then I guess this is better than hissing and booing."

Don Flanagan, a spokesman for former Gov. King, said King had done a great deal for higher education in the state, citing King's work to form the state Board of Regents as well as higher budgetary support than other governors.

"It was the best budget that higher education had received in a decade," Flanagan said.

Flanagan said King was not upset about the protest plans, stressing "he has nothing to be sorry for or be ashamed for."

Flanagan said he couldn't understand why students were protesting, since King is no longer in office.

"It'll keep them busy, I suppose," Flanagan said.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said he "will be disappointed, because I think it will take something away from the occasion."

"I think he helped interpret to many people in the Commonwealth the importance of higher education, and that was a significant achievement," Duffey said.

Tenure debate sparked after 11 suspensions

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

The question of whether tenured professors can be threatened with the loss of their jobs is beginning to receive national and worldwide attention.

The spring-break-week suspensions of four University of Massachusetts professors for refusal to pay an agency fee to the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) is the cause of the attention, according to UMass astronomy Professor Edward Harrison. Harrison said The New York Times has contacted him in connection with the story and Newsweek has also expressed an interest in the controversy.

"The question of infringing on the sanctity of tenure may not impress the average person" but academics are concerned with "people's rights to speak freely and express their views," Harrison said.

Harrison said the UMass administration, including Chancellor Joseph Duffey, lack academic experience and therefore has little regard for issues like tenure and academic freedom.

Harrison said most administrators "use their positions for nothing more than stepping stones for their careers."

Recently members of the so-called "Amherst 11," comprised of professors who have refused to pay the MSP agency fee, sent a letter to all professors and librarians at the UMass-Amherst and UMass-Boston campuses. The letter asked all who believe the agency fee requirement in the union contract should be eliminated to sign and return the letter. Harrison said more than 300 (20 percent) of the professors and librarians have answered and the responses have been sent to UMass President David C. Knapp's office.

Harrison said he was somewhat pleased with the response since, in his view, many professors who would otherwise be supportive are afraid to stand up to the union.

Bruce Jacobson, professor of biochemistry and one of the "Amherst 11" said Science, the scientific report of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, will come out with a story on the controversy next week. Yesterday Professor Vere Chappel presented the "Amherst 11's" side of the issue on WTTT radio in Amherst, Harrison said.

Harrison said administrators may regret the hard line stance they've taken on the issue.

"They've lit a fuse, and that fuse is going to be lit for a long time. It may even explode on them. It's a ripple that will run throughout the world," he said.

Town Meeting: 'Stop Salvador aid'

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

The 224th annual Amherst Town Meeting wrapped up Monday night with the passing of an article which recommends the town inform its congressional representatives that Amherst opposes U.S. military and economic aid to El Salvador.

The article, which passed by a vote of 121 to 40, survived a motion to dismiss because "some Town Meeting members felt the article was inappropriate for Town Meeting," said Edith Wilkinson, Selectmen chair. A similar resolution was rejected by Town Meeting members in 1981.

The article was sponsored by Andrew Glace, a member of the Amherst Committee on El Salvador. The vote Monday "shows how much opposition has grown" during the two years of American involvement in El Salvador, Glace said.

U.S. Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass, Sen. Paul Tsongas, and Sen. Edward Kennedy, both Democrats, make up the congressional delegation Amherst will inform.

Members did, however, dismiss an article which would prohibit both strikebreaking and employment of town employees to companies experiencing strike problems, according to Wilkinson.

"It turns out the article was illegal as written and petitioners are going to iron out the problems," she said.

The nine articles addressing zoning recommendations made by the town Planning Board were passed without controversy, Wilkinson said.

Three private zoning requests were also presented, one of which ws dismissed and the others defeated.

The meeting ended with comments by Wilkinson and Moderator William Field.

"The meeting was successful with an unusually good attendance," Wilkinson said, "Important budget items were passed, all in all I feel pretty good about it."

17-year University employee charges sex discrimination

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The Associate Director of the Office of Planning and Budget has filed a sexual discrimination charge against the University of Massachusetts claiming she was denied a promotion which was given to a "less-qualified man."

Rosemarie Strother has filed the charge against the University with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD), and the Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

John L. DeNyse, vice-chancellor for Administration and Finance has been named in the suit.

When asked Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said he first heard about the charges after reading Monday's Hampshire Gazette.

"This comes purely out of the blue," he said.

Duffey would not comment further on the matter.

Strother, who has been the associate director of the Office of Planning and Budget since 1979 and a University employee since 1966, was passed over for the position of acting-director of the budget office on March 11.

The position was given to Paul J. Page, the director of Financial Affairs in Whitmore.

Strother said she assumed the position of acting director of the office last November after Marie Reid, then assistant chancellor and director of the office announced she was resigning her position effective in January.

Reid cited racial discrimination as her reason for leaving.

"After she left, I had a feeling I was next. The general attitude around the office just added to that," Strother said.

From last November until March 11, Strother said she worked on the complicated revenue budget, and the day it was finished DeNyse informed her of his decision to promote Page.

His timing was "a slap in the face" considering the work involved, she said.

The position of acting director of the office is a temporary one because a permanent person will be named to the position after a search is conducted, she said.

"I truly believe I was the better qualified person for this position based on my job performance and experience. If I didn't think it, I wouldn't have pursued it," she said.

World and National News

Reagan vows to fight inflationary bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said yesterday night "it is time to draw the line" in his budget battle with Congress and vowed to veto any bill that would raise taxes while the nation is emerging from recession.

Fielding questions at his 17th formal news conference, Reagan posted the same warning against spending increases that might "rekindle the fires of inflation and high interest rates."

Reagan is confronting Republicans as well as Democrats as Congress works to complete a fiscal 1984 budget that cuts deficits below his own plan.

In an effort to trim deficits below the $189 billion level proposed by Reagan, the Democrat-controlled House has approved a plan calling for a $30 billion tax increase in fiscal 1984. The Senate is still trying to break a deadlock over the size of a new tax increase.

Reagan told reporters said he'd wait and see whether to accept the virtually certain vote of Congress to repeal the withholding of income taxes from interest and dividend payments. Earlier he had threatened to veto repeal, but he said now, "I understand there's talk of a compromise. I'm going to wait and see what they come up with on the Hill."

On other points, the president:

—Said "a pretty good hatchet job has been done on us," as to his administration's concern for problems facing black Americans. Reagan said he believes the federal government has an obligation to protect constitutional rights "at point of bayonet if necessary."

He hasn't abandoned black voters, Reagan said, adding, "I have perfect confidence of our chances if we could get the truth to them."

—Declined to say whether he will reappoint Paul Volcker as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

—Said "We have great suspicion" that the Soviet Union has violated arms control agreements by testing new missiles, "but we don't have solid evidence." He said the United States is "not sure this is the same weapon or that they're testing two weapons. ... but we have reason to believe they are in violation of the SALT agreement."

—Reaffirmed his optimism that Syria will eventually withdraw from Lebanon despite its hostile attitude toward the Lebanese-Israeli accord.

Arms talks progress

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The United States began exploring with the Soviet Union yesterday a proposal to limit nuclear warheads in Europe as an interim step toward banishing medium-range missiles from the Continent.

The outlook for an accord was unclear after U.S. negotiator Paul H. Nitze met for two hours with his Soviet counterpart, Yuli A. Kvitsinskother session was scheduled for tomorrow.

The Soviets already have condemned the U.S. proposal as a scheme to impose a "unilateral reduction" of the missiles targeted on Western Europe. Privately, American officials do not expect a breakthrough in the current round, the fourth since the talks were opened in November 1981.

Kvitsinsky was at the steps of the Soviets' rose-colored villa here to greet Nitze and the other members of the U.S. delegation on their arrival. They shook hands and seemed in good humor while photograhers took their pictures.

No statements were issued before or after the session, but it was learned that no new ground was broken during the discussion.

The Soviets are demanding that the independent nuclear forces of Britain and France be counted, along with U.S. warheads, against the Soviet total. The allies have rejected the proposition.

There are plans to eventually put more than 1,000 warheads on the British and French missiles — more than the warheads currently on the potent SS-20 missiles the Soviets have targeted on Western Europe.

French President Francois Mitterrand and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl reaffirmed at a meeting in Paris their supporotations end in failure.

Pact fuels violence

LEBANON (AP) — Israel and Lebanon signed their troop withdrawal agreement yesterday and an angry Syria launched a blockade of road traffic between Lebanon and the rest of the Arab world.

Saudi Arabia gave the pact guarded support, and banners supporting the agreement appeared in several Beirut neighborhoods. But Lebanese troops opened fire during a demonstration by about 100 pro-Iranian Shiites opposing the pact, and several people were wounded.

The U.S.-sponsored agreement providing for the withdrawal of the 25,000 Israeli troops in central and southern Lebanon was signed in twin ceremonies by the three diplomats who did most of the negotiating: David Kimche, director-general of the Israeli Foreign Ministry; Ambassador Antoine Fattal of Lebanon and Morris Draper, a special U.S. Middle East envoy.

"If we sign this agreement with you, it is because Lebanon has an urgent need for tranquility and order," Fattal told Kimche after they signed the 37-page text in the south Beirut suburb of Khalde.

The Israeli negotiator hailed the accord as a "new chapter in our history." He said nothing about the possibility that it might not take effect because of Syrian refusal to withdraw its 40,000 troops and the 8,000 to 12,000 Palestinian guerrillas in northern and eastern Lebanon.

After the Khalde ceremony, the diplomats flew to the northern Israeli border town of Kiryat Shmona, for a second signing ceremony.

Without mentioning Syria by name, President Reagan in Washington called on "Lebanon's friends" to support the agreement.

House repeals dividend taxes

WASHINGTON — The House, bowing to public pressure, voted 382-41 yesterday to repeal a 1982 law requiring that taxes be withheld from interest and dividends.

Among Democrats, 225 voted to repeal the provision and 32 opposed it. Among Republicans, 157 voted to repeal and 9 opposed it. The margin was greater than the two-thirds necessary to override any presidential veto.

The repeal effort now moves to the Senate, which already has voted to block implementation of the law.

The House action was prompted by a record 22 million letters to Congress demanding repeal.

But it came over objections of President Reagan and the Democratic leadership of the House, who want withholding to go into effect as scheduled July 1 in an effort to catch some of those who cheat the tax collector on their savings.

Primarily, it's Wilson Goode

PHILADELPHIA — With 89 percent of 1,794 precincts reporting, Goode had 269,726 votes or 50.9 percent, Rizzo had 255,849 votes or 48.3 percent and Steve Douglas, a political consultant, had the remaining .8 percent.

Rizzo had led much of the night because the white working-class areas where he ran best reported first, but Goode surged into the lead as the mainly black neighborhoods reported.

The $4 million primary battle in the nation's fourth-largest city was notably free of the racial tension that marked last month's mayoral election in Chicago.

Goode's opponent in the Nov. 8 general election in this heavily Democratic city will be Republic John Egan, a Democratic switchover who is charman of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange and won the party's endorsement. With 66 percent of the vote counted, he led with 27,122 votes; former city controller Thomas Gola had 14,244 votes, and former Rep. Charles Lougherty had 15,693.

Goode, 44, had been favored in pre-election polls. A victory for him in November would put four of the nation's six largest cities — including Harold Washington in Chicago, Tom Bradley in Los Angeles and Coleman Young in Detroit.

High tech hazards health

BOSTON — Millions of workers are threatening their health by using computer terminals, an office workers' organization said yesterday, and it opened a national effort to cut the potential risks.

The 12,000-member group, 9 To 5, National Association of Working Women, announced a campaign aimed at educating users, encouraging research on video display terminals, and adopting measures to protect workers.

A national, toll-free hotline to give and gather information on VDT safety also was begun, the group said. The national number is 1-800-521-VDTS. In Ohio, the number is 1-800-522-VDTS.

Teachers may quit union

QUINCY — Public school teachers working here without a contract since November 1981 will vote today on quitting the statewide Massachusetts Teachers Association over complaints that MTA was more concerned about El Salvador than local issues.

"We feel the MTA and the NEA are involved in too many peripheral issues that have no bearing on the aims of Quincy Educational Association," said Hank Pasquerella, president of the Quincy affiliate.

The NEA is the National Education Association, to which the Massachusetts organization is affiliated.

Connecticut River diversion plan partially blocked

By MICHAEL HOTALING
Collegian Staff

A bill passed by the Massachusetts Senate last Wednesday set rigid standards which would have to be maintained before the Connecticut River could be diverted to provide water to the Quabbin Reservoir.

An existing controversy over the proposed diversion of Connecticut river waters into the Quabbin reservoir prompted Sen. John Olver (D-Amherst) and other concerned legislators to take action.

The bill includes all existing diversion proposals and requires that "a set of criteria be met for the development of all the water supply within the receiving basin before diversion can be considered," said Stan Rosenberg, spokesman from Olver's office.

"If the criteria are met, then options can be considered from one basin to the next," Rosenberg said. "These criteria include identification of leaks in the water system, metering of all users of the system and development of a rate structure which represents the true cost of the water."

A study done by the Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) estimated 40 percent of the water in the Boston water system is wasted, according to Ed Kaynor of the Water Resources Research Center at the University of Massachusetts.

"A study was done in 1975 by the Water Resources Research Center which was rejected by the MDC," Kaynor said. "But when they did their own study, the results were the same. It was this 40 percent waste that substantiated Sen. Olver's concern."

The diversion of the Connecticut River was originally proposed during a drought in 1965 at which time the reservoir, which supplies approximately 40 percent of the state's water, was particularly low. Recently, however, rainfall has been abundant and the reservoir has been full.

"By April 30 of this year, 32.56 inches of precipitation had fallen in Massachusetts. That means in four months we've received as much rainfall as normally falls in nine," Kaynor said.

Kaynor said that his personal opposition to diversion is because of the effect it would have on the Quabbin Reservoir.

"Quabbin was originally built for a source of clear, pristine, mountain spring water. The water of the Connecticut river is 'class B' at best. Diversion would destroy a wonderful wilderness area by destroying the quality of Quabbin water," Kaynor said.

Kaynor also mentioned the effects the Vernon nuclear power plant would have on the water supply. The plant is on the Connecticut river and has had periodic radioactive spillage problems, he said.

The bill must now go through the House and it is "unclear as to when they will take it up," Rosenberg said.

The House is the critical body because in past years it has been concerned about losing power, Kaynor said.

"The bill would take control away from the Legislature and place it in the hands of the Water Resources Commission (WRC)," he said.

Although the bill provides for much more efficient use of water, some people are concerned that because the WRC operates more quietly than the Legislature, the WRC could take later action that would go unnoticed by the public, Kaynor said.

Musicians war against Reagan with rock, punk

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Political speeches interspersed with folk, rock and hardcore punk music will be the order of the day tomorrow as the "Rock Against Reagan" tour makes its Amherst stop on the Metawampe Lawn at the University of Massachusetts.

San Francisco's Millions of Dead Cops is the headlining hardcore act for tomorrow's rally/concert. Other bands include The Dicks, Dirty Rotten Imbeciles and Crucifix, all from San Francisco, and local bands 8th Route Army and the Outpatients. Rock groups include Fast, Clean and Safe, and Special Interest Group. Folksingers for the event are Alan Anderson and Dave Lippman, along with an electronic synthesizer player known as Rupert.

The event is being sponsored at UMass by the Students Against Militarism.

The speakers will include a Vietnam veteran and a UMass professor, according to a spokesman for the tour who referred to himself as "Evan from the Yippies." The event will run from noon to 6 p.m.

"The hardcore movement is an anarchistic movement, very politically oriented," Evan said.

The tour began in March at the National Yippie Conference in Boston. The rally and various bands have since been all over the country. One of the major events the rally will organize is the July 4 Washington, D.C. rally, which will include the Dead Kennedys from San Francisco.

The Dead Kennedys will also join several bands on November 22 on the 20th anniversary of the assassination of John F. Kennedy in Dallas, Texas. The tour will end with a large conference in Dallas on that date, Evan said.

Evan also said the organizers of Rock Against Reagan hope to protest the Republican National Convention in August 1984, which will also be in Dallas.

"We want to get all coalitions of people to come down to Dallas and protest," he said.

According to the official Rock Against Reagan pamphlet, "from the use of sexism to brutal racial attacks by the police, Reagan continues a program of unparalled exploitation. Using such issues as the draft, the "War on Drugs" diversion of enforcement from heroin and hard drugs, nuclear power, and terrorism, the Reagan Administration maintains a "nation divided."

Union representatives gird for talks

By BROOKE STATES
Collegian Staff

Negotiations for 2,500 University of Massachusetts workers are scheduled to begin in two weeks with the Board of Regents, and the affected unions on campus are preparing for the talks.

Talks had been held up because of a petition filed by the Regents with the State Labor Relations Commission. The petition sought to combine the 16 certified bargaining units, (unions) that represent workers in the state's higher educational system. The unions would have been joined into three units for bargaining. Union leaders said they felt that this was a union-busting move and fought against it.

The affected unions at UMass are the American Federation of City, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME), Local 1776, and the Massachusetts Teachers Associates (MTA). The faculty union and the Massachusetts Society of Professors are negotiating with the Board of Trustees. Local 1776 and MTA will negotiate separately with the Regents.

According to MTA president Kathy Murray the elimination of the dual-pay system will be an important demand at the bargaining table.

"Everyone who came in after the contract was signed was put on a different pay scale. They worked at 36 months on a lower pay scale," Murray said.

"If you have a grade 7 employee, which is what many of the secretaries are, they would start off on step three with a weekly salary of $231, and could go up to $251. With dual pay they start off at $201. They have to work for those 36 months before they can go up to the $231 figure, and get on the step system," she said.

"Coverage for dental and optical exams is important, as well as a freeze on parking fees," said Judy Gagnon, a steward in MTA and an alternate on the negotiating committee.

"Leadership has done a good job and our executive board works together. We have a lot more members involved then we used to. We got back 700 questionnaires out of 1,200 qwuestionnaires that were sent out to our membership," she said.

"We have better leadership and better communications now. Our newsletter and mailgrams to members have helped," said Winnifred Stone, a grievance officer for MTA who has been active in the union for two years.

"We need stronger language in the contract dealing with seniority and promotions. Ninety percent of the filed grievances have to do with these two areas," she said.

"It would be more practical to negotiate with those who will implement the contract, rather than the Regents. They are probably angry at us because we did not go along with coordinated bargaining," Stone said.

"We are seeking wage parity with other state workers. Our bargaining power is stronger and we have a few cards in our hands if we have to engage in any type of activity to force the Regents hand," Brian Walker, President of Local 1776, said.

Union stewards in Local 1776 have formed a committee to better organize the union.

"We need to have better communication between stewards and members as a way of facilitating rank-and-file participation in the affairs of the local," Shop Steward Alan Compagnon said.

"The most important thing we want to get out of the stewards' council is greater democracy in the union. We have been putting out a newsletter for the stewards and strengthening the local," he said.

"We formed the stewards' council in the TOC (Top of the Campus) lounge just after Christmas. There are 65 stewards' slots on campus, and not all are filled. We have about half of the stewards come to meetings," former union president and current Steward Jonathan Tuttle said. "There is a vacuum at the top of local leadership. There is no news, no meetings, nothing, and no communication between membership and leadership," Tuttle said.

Faculty Senate to decide on General Education Council

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate will vote Thursday on whether to create a General Education Council.

A two-thirds vote is necessary to initiate the council because a bylaw change would be necessary. Under Senate constitution any bylaw change must receive a two-thirds majority.

The proposal for the council was introduced to the Senate at its April 7 meeting. For the past two meetings the Senate has debated whether to have a council.

The General Education Council, if created, will accept the reservations and alterations suggested by an Ad Hoc Committee's report on General Education and the Academic Matters Council report.

According to a senate Rules Committee's special report, the council will be responsible for developing policy recommendations, and reviewing and recommending courses proposed by departments and programs for the General Education Curriculum.

Elections for the offices of secretary of the senate, presiding officer and delegate to the Board of Trustees will also be held at the final meeting. James Leheny, current secretary, and Paula Marks, current presiding officer, will both be stepping down from their respective positions, as will Jay Demerath, present Board of Trustees' delegate.

The program and Budget Council will present a special report regarding a change of status for the Legal Studies Program. The report recommends the program change its name to Department of Legal Studies. According to the report, absolutely no budgetary changes will result from such a name change because the Legal Studies functions as a department and is so treated within the Faculty of social and behavioral sciences.

A special report will be presented by the Campus Physical Planning Committee concerning the forwarding of a capital outlay request to the faculty Senate. This request is for fiscal year 1985.

The meeting will be held in Room 120, School of Manage·nent.

Search begins for new BDIC head

A search for a new director of the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) program is now in progress.

Director Frank Fata, a professor of Italian at the University of Massachusetts will step down from his post this spring. He will, however, continue counseling BDIC students until Jan., when he plans to go on sabbatical.

When asked about the change, he said, "It is normal to have a fresh director step in every few years."

He has been the director of the program for the past five years.

"We have notified all departments at UMass, including the affirmative action department, that the BDIC office is accepting nominations and resumes," Fata said.

These will then be reviewed by faculty supervisors of the program and "a recommendation for the position will be made in the next two weeks," Fata said.

The BDIC program allows students to design a major not available through single departments. Under faculty guidance, the student arranges a program concentrating on internships, exchanges and use of the five college area resources.

The program includes 125 students. Fifty will graduate this year.

Administrator applications submitted

Preliminary interviews should begin by mid-July in the search for a new vice-chancellor for academic affairs and provost, Richard Stein, search committee chairman, said.

More than 200 applications were received for the post which has been temporarily filled by Dean Alfange, a political science professor who previously served as acting provost from June, 1975 to October, 1976. The number of candidates will be reduced to between 15 and 20 before the off-campus interviews begin, Stein said.

Stein said he hoped to reduce that group by half for the final interviews to begin by mid-July. He said the candidates are such that it is doubtful they will be able to "just pack up and leave" their current jobs to assume the position by Sept.

He declined to say which of the applicants and/or finalists are currently employed at UMass.

Olver recognized with award

State Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, received the Friend of Education and the Roosevelt Day Award last Saturday.

On behalf of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, President Carol Doherty presented the award to Olver. "Throughout his legislative career John Olver has been a most steadfast and a most effective advocate of quality education and tax reform," she said.

Congressman Barney Frand, D-Mass., presented the Roosevelt Day Award to the senator on behalf of Americans for Democratic Action. This was the 34th annual presentation of the award, an award that has gone to Michael Dukakis and Robert F. Dronan. Frank cited Sen. Olver as "compassionate, effective and responsive to the people." Governor Dukakis called the senator a "power of leadership."

To all the people of second sunset Cance, thanx for the good times, you've made it worthwhile! Good luck and goodbye to the Cance House Staff: Don, Aileen, Steve, Matt, Chuck, Scott, Elaine, Cathy, Mark, Holly, and Al.

Last Senate meeting may net first A.G. in a year

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

In its last meeting of the year, the Undergraduate Student Senate tonight will appoint the first University of Massachusetts student attorney general in more than a year.

Student Government Association (SGA) co-President Tom Ahern said yesterday he hoped the recently-formed Attorney General Search Committee would evaluate all five attorney general candidates so he could make the final choice for Senate approval.

The attorney general selection process was delayed this year "because appointments (to the search committee) were delayed," according to acting Attorney General Elizabeth Hill.

Nominations for the seven-member search committee began in early April, and formation of the committee was held up until yesterday because former Clerk of Courts Christopher Cook would not choose two student judges who were necessary to complete the committee.

Lawrence Mestel, elected clerk of courts last week, appointed two judges to the committee "as his first order of business," said Bill Collins, one of the judges chosen.

Ahern said the committee would meet last night and interview all of the candidates for the attorney general's position.

"They have a list of criteria and a list of questions," to ask candidates, Ahern said. The committee will test candidates on "awareness of issues of social and campus concern," and also "how well they know the (SGA) constitution and bylaws, and how well they interact with people," Ahern said.

"The search committee will rate them and turn three names into me," he said. Then, Ahern said, he will choose the candidate he feels is most competent, and the Senate must approve that choice by a two-thirds vote for that person to become attorney general.

Because of "technicalities" in the search process last year, the SGA has had an acting attorney general for the past year, according to assistant Attorney General Randy Chapman.

"Initially (the choice of an attorney general) was delayed because there was an insufficient number of candidates," Chapman said.

Hill was the only candidate for the position last year, so she was appointed acting attorney general, he said.

Chapman ran for attorney general in the fall, but at that time, he said, "by following the search committee affirmative action guidelines, they ran into technical problems in selecting a candidate."

The fall search committee "came back with one recommendation — me," Chapman said. But Murphy did not accept the committee's recommendations, and an attorney general was never approved by the Senate.

Chapman said Murphy did not choose him because "I am not politically aligned with Jim. He felt it would be detrimental to the president's office."

But Hill disagreed, saying the search committee should give the SGA president more than one candidate to choose from.

"If it is supposed to be an appointment, then he (Murphy) should have had a choice," Hill said.

Chapman said Murphy could choose to accept or ignore the search committee's recommendations, "but he was constitutionally required to make an appointment, and he didn't."

Hill said Murphy "made an appointment of acting attorney general, so I think that to say he didn't make an appointment is inaccurate."

Murphy was at a trustees meeting, and could not be reached for comment.

300 plants seized in pot raid

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

In one of three drug-related incidents Monday, Amherst Police in conjunction with the state police seized 300 marijuana plants and three ounces of a white powder believed to be cocaine with an approximate street value of $8,500.

Police arrested a 25-year-old Amherst man for possesion of the drugs with the intent to distribute. Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia said the man claimed he was self-employed.

"The plants were in various growth stages and growing in and outside of the house," Maia said.

The seizure was made on a search warrant from the Hampshire-Franklin Counties District Court. The arrest was made through a combined investigation by Amherst and the state police.

Maia said the suspect was released on $1,000 bail and would be arraigned in Hampshire-Franklin counties District Court on Tuesday.

Three hours later, at 9:15 p.m. in what Maia called an unrelated incident, police seized marijuana and hashish from the home of a Grey St. resident. No arrest was made, police said.

A 22-year-old man from Delaware, Ohio, was arrested near the Carriage Shops on North Pleasant St. for possesion of marijuana, police said.

A community service officer said he observed the man with a plastic bag of marijuana and called the Amherst police, who made the arrest at 12:56 a.m. Tuesday, police said.

Amherst police reported two car accidents without personal injury and with minor car damage on Eastman Lane Monday evening. Police said a 19-year-old Shrewsbury man was waiting in his car on Eastman Lane to take a left turn onto East Pleasant St. when the car driven by an 18-year-old woman from Beach Street struck the rear of his car. The woman was issued a citation for failure to use care in stopping, police said.

The second accident occured at 7:32 p.m. at the intersection of Eastman Lane and North Pleasant Street when the car driven by a 23-year-old Northampton man, stopped at the intersection, was hit by another car travelling east through the intersection. Police said minor damage resulted but no citations were issued.

The theft of a red 1981 Honda 250 racing motorcycle was reported at 11:02 a.m. Monday by a North Amherst resident, police said. The motorcycle was reported stolen on Sunday after 6 p.m.

Truck strikes pedestrian

The driver of a pickup truck that struck a pedestrian minutes after 4 p.m. Monday was cited for having no registration in possession and failing to grant way to a pedestrian in an incident that occured on Commonwealth Avenue in front of the Physical Plant, University of Massachusetts police said yesterday.

Amherst Firefighters pedestrian to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital, Northampton.

In other police action:

●Vandals made off with the dome and dial mechanism of a parking meter located in Lot 46 near the west side of Wheeler House, police said yesterday.

The missing meter segment, worth $125, was probably stolen between Friday and Monday, police said.

●A $700 IBM Selectric typewriter was reported missing from room 434 of the Student Union building, police said yesterday. It was reportedly stolen sometimes between 8 p.m. Friday and 11 p.m. Monday.

●An AM/FM stereo cassette player and power booster, with a combined value of $428, was reported stolen from a car parked in Lot 49 sometime between 10 p.m. Thursday and 11 p.m. Friday. Police said the car was left locked but was found unlocked the next day. The dashboard where the set was located was unharmed.

C.C. may be air conditioned

By SAMUEL CHALFEN
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center administration last week announced it may install a new air conditioning unit in the first floor of the Student Union — at a cost of $170,000.

Campus Center Director William Harris said the unit will primarily benefit the Hatch, where high temperatures sometimes cause customers to eat elsewhere, resulting in long lines in the Coffee Shop and other food service areas.

Board of Governors (BOG) Vice Chairman Michael Reilly said with an estimated $30 million in repairs necessary in the Campus Center-Student Union complex, the money would be better spent in repair work.

Harris said the Campus Center administration has not yet fully resolved how and when to finance the necessary repair work.

Former University of Massachusetts Building Authority Chairman Evan Johnson said recently the repairs necessary in the Student Unions roof, the Campus Center Flagstone Cafe and the Campus Center garage make up only a small part of building problems on campus. He said state and campus administrators have known about most of the problems for more than 10 years, but because of a current lack of funding and a poor organizational structure within the Massachusetts higher education network, no repair work has been undertaken.

Reilly said that since the building is making a profit for the first time in its 12-year history, the Campus Center administration should be spending the money on repairs.

"Right now they're foreseeing a surplus of at least $200,000," Reilly said, "but they're trying to spend it all on capital improvements."

This issue ties in directly with the Board's summer project of attempting to obtain a fee waiver for the new full-costing policy charge, he said.

Under the full-costing policy, the Campus Center will have to pay $300,000 to a central University fund to pay for administrative costs.

The BOG, Reilly said, will lobby University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp to obtain a fee-waiver for the Campus Center. With the fee waiver, Reilly said, if the Campus Center does not earn as much as is expected, then administrators will not be under pressure to raise student fees to pay for maintenance and operation costs.

Student Government Association co-President Thomas Ahern said he wanted to work more closely with the BOG and devise a strategy to stop the Campus Center administration from "strong-arming" policies through without student consent.

"Student input should be the most important part of (decision making)," Ahern said. "Harris is putting an air conditioner in the Hatch when there are student offices which don't even have a window."

Harris leads from 9th floor

By SAM CHALFEN
Collegian Staff

High up in the Campus Center, on the eighth floor overlooking Metawampe Lawn and a cluster of red brick buildings, William Harris, director of the Campus Center, sits at his desk.

The lives of approximately 700 employees — about 550 of them student employees — are influenced according to the decisions made here. Harris directs the Campus Center and its $14 million yearly budget.

Born in Middleton, Ohio, Harris earned his B.A. in social administration from Ohio State University. After graduation, he joined the Air Force and remained in the military for 13 years. During the last six of those years, from 1962 to 1968, he served as a special service officer, working on early computerized Intercontinental Ballistic Missile systems. He earned his M.A. in counseling during the last of his Air Force years from the University of North Dakota.

After leaving the Air Force, Harris moved to Newark, New Jersey, where he helped open the Essex Community College. But, when Rutgers University offered him a position as assistant dean of students, he moved on. In 1969 he began his first of seven years at what he calls, "probably the most difficult job at probably the most difficult campus in the country." Within a year he took the job as Rutgers' campus center director.

"These were the Viet Nam War years, don't forget," Harris says, "We had our share of demonstrations. There was drug selling. There were muggings...One year we had to replace all of the Campus Center's furniture. It had disappeared."

These days, vestiges of Harris' military background emerge in his management terminology. Harris calls long-term decisions "strategic decisions;" short-term ones go by "tactical decisions."

Harris explains that he, as Campus Center director, generally makes the strategic decisions, while "unit managers" — managers of Food Services, the University Store and other departments — make the short-term, day-to-day policy decisions.

Harris now must make the strategic decision of whether to authorize the installation of a $170,000 air conditioning unit in the first floor of the Student Union building. While Harris considers this, a former UMass Building Authority member has estimated the Campus Center would have to spend about $30 million for repairs in the Student Union, the Campus Center and the Campus Center Garage.

Harris talks of the Campus Center proudly. He maintains that despite a lack of overt competition, managers and employees of the University Store, Food Services, Conference Services, the hotel and other Campus Center departments regularly set and achieve tough goals.

"I think our people are doing better at their jobs than any one in the valley," Harris says with a smile. "Our people are not down and outers...We have an excellent staff."

Fundraising strategy targets alumni

By PAULA HOYT
Collegian Staff

With the current U.S. economic conditions cutting into the budget for the University of Massachusetts, more money is going to have to come from the private sector if the school is going to maintain the quality of the education it offers, according to UMass fundraisers.

And the private sector is meeting this need.

"Alumni are realizing the importance of financially supporting their alma mater. We are making the cause that we need support from alumni to supplement what the state budget doesn't supply," said Bonnie Dowd, assistant director to the Annual Fund.

The Annual Fund of private gifts to the University increased by 30 percent from 1981 to 1982. The gift total for 1982 was $625,213, and the total for the previous year was $481,429, according to the 1982 UMass Report of Private giving.

The amount of funds from corporate matching gifts, in which businesses match alumni employee donations, has shown a large increase as well, Dowd said.

For the past 11 years, donations were solicited by regional phone-a-thons which only reached one third of the alumni. Volunteer alumni called peers within their living areas and asked for pledges, she said.

The Annual Fund is now moving ahead to a "Telefund" program, designed to reach all the alumni and increase contributions, Dowd said. The program involves student rather than alumni volunteers, she said.

There is a permanent telephone facility located in Memorial Hall, with students on contract working two to three nights a week, said Larry Kocot, project director for Telefund.

With the phone-a-thons, only a segmented group of prior givers were contacted. The Telefund system is going to reach every alumnus, including the 1983 graduates, Dowd said.

"Because of the growing need for support, we need to reach everybody. The goal of Telefund is to increase the level of giving, the average gift amount, and the number of contributors," she said.

Dowd said the program began in March of this year, and already the average pledge amount has increased. In 1982, the average individual donation was $34.43, and so far through Telefund, the average has increased to $46.80, Dowd said.

Rhododendrons revitalized

By JIM POTTER
Collegian Staff

After months of renovations by students, faculty and administration, the century-old Rhododendron Garden at the University of Massachusetts was dedicated in honor of a retiring professor Sunday.

The garden was dedicated to Prof. Gordon S. King, director of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture arboriculture program, who is retiring Aug. after nearly 32 years of teaching at the University.

King was just one of the many faculty and administrators who worked with students on the renovations project, located between the chancellor's house and University Health Services.

Between 50 and 75 Stockbridge and University students, faculty, employees and administrators worked together organizing, designing, constructing, raising funds and seeking shrub donations.

"Everyone involved was really cooperative," said Mark Noonan a Stockbridge Class of 1983 arboriculture major who is the originator of the project.

The estimated retail value of the 400 to 500 plants and other materials donated from various nurseries is $9,000. Approximately $1,000 was contributed by professors and industries, according to Noonan. The money will be used to pay for the engraving of a stone dedicated to King and transportation used to get the plants, Noonan said.

The garden was begun in 1877 when the first trees were planted at Massachusetts Agricultural College. Most of the trees came from Japan and are the first of their type introduced in the United States. The garden was used as the site for class commencements when the University was still an agricultural school.

Noonan said he does not want renovations to stop at this point.

Wilson does Goode against Rizzo in Philly

By TRACY ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

As the Goode camp patiently awaits the election results, they are confident that they will be electing the second black mayor in as many months.

Polls conducted in the last week predicted Philadelphia mayoral candidate Wilson Goode would be the victor in yesterday's primary race of over former two-time mayor Frank L. Rizzo.

Questionnaires distributed by the Philadelphia Daily News several days ago showed that Goode led the other candidates with a 21-26 pt. margin. May 7th, results tabulated in a TV poll predicted Goode as capturing 51 percent of the community vote, while Rizzo was predicted to land 30 percent, 14 percent undecided, and 5 percent of the votes going to other candidates.

Because Wilson Goode is a black candidate, the question of the primary becoming a 'racial' issue is a factor. According to Ben Binswanger, the Assistant Communications Director for the Goode campaign, "there has been a lot of comparison to the recent mayoral race in Chicago which elected that city's first black mayor," Binswanger said.

When the question of race was presented to Goode, he replied, "Philadelphia is nothing like Chicago, Chicago is 1,000 miles away and there are 1,000 differences in the candidates," Goode said.

Binswanger said that naturally there had to be racial implications because Philadelphia has never had a black mayor.

"You can't escape the implications, they'll exist in one form or another. So far the race has been clean fight. Both of the candidates have exercised a lot of integrity," Binswanger said.

The deciding factor that many feel will capture the election is the voter turnout. Record turnout has been predicted and that will work in Goode's favor.

People have been pressured to vote all through the campaign, even if they must inconvenience themselves to do so, said Norman Robbins, a Philadelphia resident.

"There is more interest in this race than in any other that I've ever seen," he said. "There have been continuous programs focusing around political awareness, especially in the past few weeks.

More than in any other primary the involvement has been extensive on all levels, from the grassroots, the media, to the black dignitaries in the city."

Monday night there was a meeting of all the black public figures in the city, including State Congressman Bill Gray, Dem. from PA, Leon Sullivan, black reverend and founder of Opportunities Industrial Center, along with Goode and the various other City Council members and community figures.

Their message was one involving voter turnout and making this a successful race not only now, but in September.

"Rizzo is the mayor of the past, Wilson is the mayor of the future. He's the man to lead us in the 80's," said Ben Binswanger of Goode's campaign.

University student shares Educational experience

By GUS MARTINS

Whenever the topic of student international exchange is brought up most would name Paris, Geneva, Madrid, or Seville as the locations they would like to go.

One student from the University of Massachusetts chose a not so well-travelled course of direction that she hopes will become more widely understood.

Susan Butler, a UMass senior and a native of New York City spent last semester in the small west African country of Togo. Togo lies in the famed "gold coast" of West Africa in between Ghana and Benin. The country was colonized by the French and as a consequence of colonialism has the problems of ill-defined borders.

Butler went to Africa on the International Student Exchange Program (ISEP), and said one of her main reasons for going was to continue her linguistic studies in French. But, she said, "my priority was academics, and the opportunity to be taught by Africans."

Butler feels that the experience was worth it. "In terms of what I learned about African history and politics it was very good," said Butler. "I learned there what was unavailable here, and I also gained an enriched understanding some of the political systems in the Third World."

"I was also introduced to significant African intellectuals, artists, and culturalists and the like who have been largely ignored here," Butler said.

Butler said that one thing she noticed was that most, if not all Africans, are aware of the proud past that the continent possessed. "The higher learning institute of Timbuktu in Mali, and the awesome construction of the pyramids in Egypt are reminders of great African feats of accomplishments and they take great pride in them," Butler said.

Butler mentioned that the African peoples take special pride in remembering their past because it was a time when Europe was not faring too well.

Butler wants members in the UMass community to think about the prospects of going to Africa to study. "The program is open through the program's office," Butler said.

"I was the only black American there until another black woman arrived from Los Angeles," Butler said. "African universities are very eager to have more Americans, especially black Americans at their schools."

It is our duty to create a favorable dialogue between Africans and Afro-Americans," Butler said. "Education may be one of the best ways to achieve this."

Many Africans didn't know about my history as a black American and I was not fully aware of their history either," Butler said. "It was a reciprocal process of sharing each other's history."

Awards presented at BCP annual event

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

As the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) celebrated its 9th annual academic awards night Friday May 13th, 70 students met with good luck.

Two other students were awarded for their excellent performance within the community. Gloria Ortiz, assistant Director of Financial Aid was also awarded.

Ortiz received an award for her years of service to the students, her dedication to the community and her overall service, according to BCP director Benjamin Rodriguez.

AHORA's president Cynthia Escriba, a senior education major along with Ginger Cardenas, a sophomore in the College of Arts and Sciences received awards for their share in helping to improve the image of the hispanic community on campus.

Astonished to have received what she calls a "merit" Escriba said that all those who devoted their time to make AHORA a success in 1983 also deserve the award.

"They all did an extraordinary job," Escriba said of AHORA's members, "our success is due to their cooperation and hard work," Escriba said. "I want to share with all this award."

Cardenas has worked with the BCP since 1981 tutoring students. She was introduced to BCP during her summer orientation at the university. Since then, she said BCP has guided her whenever she encounters problems.

"I had no idea...I was really surprised," Cardenas said upon being named a recipient.

Among those students who received awards in recognition of their academic excellence, were 17 in the class of '83, 21 in the class of '84, 11 in the class of '85 and 21 students in the class of '86.

Since its inception in 1975 as an academic and resource center for hispanics, BCP has stood behind every hispanic student entering the university. By helping them to adapt to the university life.

With academic excellence and outstanding community achievement award, BCP opens doors for students to strive for excellence in the community and at the university.

All 63 BCP graduates received awards for their years of hard work.

The staff of Black Affairs wishes everybody the best of luck on finals, and a safe summer.

A graduation poem

By DARYL ELLIOT
Special to the Collegian

Went off to college, it sounded good
Believed in that for which our country stood
A good job would contribute all I could
Soon learned there was something I misunderstood

The reason why our country's strong is cuz the Third World has been wronged
And in their fight for Liberation
they fight against our corporations

So the government reduced student aid
& increased the military with taxes paid
Their plan is clear for us to see
To increase the funds of R.O.T.C.

For those who have money it doesn't matter
The system's designed so they just get fatter
So if at college the poor want to stay
We're forced to sign our lives away
So to stay at our school of higher earning
We must take their classes of death & burning

College graduation is a big day
End of the parties & leisure play
The ROTC grads may not live much more
They're off to fight in imperialist war
Ruling class grads are set with a job
In their parents tradition they'll start to rob

And for the middle class it's not the same
Time to now play the corporate game
Fight friends for jobs; it doesn't hurt
Take uniforms of ties, or blouse & skirt

Their production formulas mean dehumanization
Your hours just strengthen the corporation
You work your Life, think you've got it made
Cuz o' the retirement benies that you'll get paid

But the corporation has another plan
Just before you retire you'll understand
They'll lay you off & say good-bye
They won't give a damn if you cry

The plan is clear for us to see
We must evict R.O.T.C.
The plan is clear for us to see
We must demand corporate democracy

The plan is clear for us to see
We must work for justice & to be free
The plan is clear for us to see
We must work for justice & to be free

The columnist sat at the broken down typewriter and tried to think of something to write for that one, final column. Yet it seemed like a task doomed from the start. He had written a good amount of columns over two and one-half years which dealt with everything from Reagan to the SGA, from high tech to Ed King, and from missiles to missed classes. Usually ideas came easily enough. But now he was truly stumped. How do you sum up four years in 55 lines? It just didn't seem possible.

John F. Hudson

Before I go any further, I suppose I should introduce myself. I'm the spirit of UMass. Yes that's right, the spirit of UMass. It's probable you've never heard of me before. I'm usually not the subject of any lectures, or slated for a D.V.P. appearance or a lead singer at the Mystery Series. I'm that intangible feeling hopefully most students get when they think back to memories or events at UMass. I'm at a lacrosse game when the team wins in overtime. I'm at the stadium on Commencement Day. It's not always a good feeling. It's not always bad. But it's a state of mind, a way of thinking only someone who's been touched by the UMass expeience could understand. Enough on men. Now back to the poor slob in front of the typewriter. He still hasn't figured out what to write. At first he thought he would write one of those typical teary-eyed, goodbye, sentimental columns. You know the type.

"Boy, I'll never forget Allman Brothers in freshman year. I'll never forget rotten Hatch coffee, D.C. chicken hockey pucks, the Drake, Pierpont, open bar parties, blah, blah, blah, blah. . ."

He realized this was much too self-indulgent. He could do that on his own. The readers shouldn't be subjected such trivial individual sentimentality.

Then he thought he'd write one of those typical bitch columns.

"In my four years at UMass, the SGA sucked, Ed King sucked, classes sucked, the food sucked, everything sucked!"

No way. Leaving this school with a rotten, pessimistic attitude was out. It was too easy. If anything UMass was a picnic compared to the "real" world he found himself entering in a few short days. The economy was a helluva lot tougher than 9:05's three days a week. He told himself to exit smiling.

"How do you sum up four years in 55 lines? It just didn't seem possible."

How about an anti-King column? It seemed to be the rage on the OP-ED page the last week. He was a senior. Why not trash the ex-governor? It was certainly easy enough. Tell the seniors to stand up and turn their backs on the man. Tell them to let all assembled in Alumni Stadium on the 28th just how they felt. It may not be original but it certainly made good copy.

Then he began to rethink this. The columnist thought about those seniors who didn't want their graduation lowered to a sad display of student demonstrations. They didn't want their parents to be disappointed, the administration embarrassed or the media satisfied in their quest for Zoo Mass images. A lot of seniors wanted a nice, quiet ceremony. Get the degree and go. Walk out feelings good about classmates rather than embarrassed by them.

He thought enough had been said already. Let each individual decide. It was just as much any senior's graduation as his own.

Finally he figured out what the subject of his last column would be. With a little help from me, he decided to write on spirit of UMass. But not the corny side. Not the side pushed at media events like Charter Day or the cliches pushed by insincere administrators.

He'd talk about his own pride, the pride of graduating and getting a degree. The satifaction of working four long years for that sheepskin. He'd talk about how this place would be a part of himself for the rest of his life, and about how he had been exposded to thousands of differing ideas and points of view in four years. And how UMass had taught him to respect, if not accept, all those ideas.

He sat back and pondered a new problem. How was he going to say goodbye to his friends and all those he had worked with over the past 1460 days? He optimistically hoped the column would speak for itself.

He was leaving UMass with this type of optimism. And he hopes that optimism about the future is one shared by the thousands of people who make up the University of Massachusetts.

Class of '83 enters the "Emerald City"

Cutting the cord: a break from UMass tradition

Tradition at the Collegian permits graduating seniors to be as sentimental, over-bearing and obnoxious as they choose to be. I'm glad there are still traditions like that left in the world.

When you've been at UMass for four years, you pick up on a lot of well-known, and sometimes not-so-well-known traditions.

Like the green light on the fourth floor of Thoreau in Southwest. I lived in Southwest for three years and must have heard about twenty-seven explanations as to why that light was there.

"Someone jumped out that window and that light is a memorial . . ."

Mary Beth Hebert

"Didn't you know? That means there's a party going on in there . . ."

Last week, I found out the real reason why the light's there.

Here, for the first time ever in print is the true story as to why there is a green light in Thoreau. It seems that once upon a time, when the low-rises were first built, there were two young men who lived on the fourth floor in Thoreau and drank heavily at the T.O.C. In order to successfully find their way home at night, they installed a GREEN LIGHT which they could see shining from their dorm, all the way up to the T.O.C. These young men did make it home and did eventually graduate. But their light remains as a beacon for other wayward imbibers.

Enought with the nostalgia. Almost.

There are other traditions in Southwest. Like the dot mural on the third floor in Pierpont. If you think the maze is mind-boggling, take a lot of drugs and go stare at that wall for a while. Another great Southwest tradition are the messages that are occasionally taped on the windows of dorms residents. These ads span the range from political propaganda to pleas for appearances by Slim Whitman.

Freshman say, "Isn't that a brand-name for beef jerky?"

There are traditions that I've maintained in the academic sector of my life too. I've skipped 90 percent of my "E-core" courses. (After 40 percent cuts, absence becomes tradition; a state that's easy to achieve at times.) Tradition has also dictated that I would never once get a pre-registration schedule with all my courses. And tradition always put me in a class in 207 Bartlett.

Or was it 205?

Social traditions have come and gone too. As a freshman, it was a six-pack of beer for the weekends. Now, as a senior, it's a case. I used to go to The Pub on Wednesday nights to hear Jim Plunkett. Now I go to the T.O.C. on Friday afternoons for the view and the two-for-one drinks. I even used to go to fraternity afterhours; a tradition that's well-ingrained into the psyches of freshmen and sophomore women living on all-women floors. There are other traditions that have crept into my social life here at UMass but they are either too sordid or too boring to be told here.

If you're a student, tradition has told you that all but three people in the administration have a screw loose somewhere. If you're an administrator, tradition has told you that all but a handful of students are pigheaded, arrogant and self-righteous.

Tradition has proved that students will always be discontent with food at the dining commons, the P.V.T.A. schedule, and any class that starts before eleven. Tradition has also shown that there will always be some kind of spring concert, co-ed bathrooms, and heat in the dorms in May. And I will sleep well at night knowing that UMass in the future will still have the same proportional mix of Japs, preps, jocks, punks, earthie-crunchies, air-heads and engineers as it does now.

This graduation will be a unique experience for me. First, it will be the first time that I will not be given my diploma by my father (a school administrators). It will also be the first time that any of my graduations have been subject to any controversy. And another first . . . my life isn't all set up in a neat little package for me to pick up at the end of the ceremony with my diploma.

Some traditions must end, but their end is only the physical cessation of their existence. While I'll no longer have to find the time to pound out my weekly column, or search for a topic to write about, in my heart, I'll always be a Collegian columnist.

Wild Kingdom here at UMass

If you have spent even a few weeks as a graduate student at UMass, you cannot have failed to notice the hordes of nameless creatures that swarm around you everywhere — on the Campus Center Concourse, in the Graduate Research Towers, and in bars all over Amherst. Most of these teeming throngs are composed of Undergraduates, a common local species whose proclivities you are well advised to learn, since the Undergraduates vastly outnumber you on this campus. In order to facilitate your recognition of the four subspecies of this animal, I have compiled an informal field guide, with the aid of a zoology professor who prefers to remain anonymous for reasons of personal safety.

Karen E. Hermann

The Freshman

You are likely to find this critter meditating under the trees by the campus pond, with his legs twisted in an excruciating yoga position and a beatific smile exposing the braces on his teeth. Being extremely young and naive, he loves to chatter, so you may easily engage him in conversation.

"So this is your first semester, huh? What do you plan to major in?"

"Humanity.'

"Oh, humanities. As in Arts and Sciences?"

"No, I said humanity. Like, people. You know, like you and me."

"Could you be a little more specific?"

The Freshie takes a deep breath, licks his lips, clicks his braces pensively. "Um, I'd like to do something new for the world, something that's never been done before. Like mellow out the vibes of all humanity."

"You have a big job ahead of you. Earning a bachelor's degree was hard enough for me. Do you have a lot of heavy assignments every night?"

"Oh, you don't have to do homework if you're cool. They'll hand you a 'B' just like in high school. No big deal. Like, parties are where my head's at now. Like I'm still young, you know what I mean?"

The Sophomore

You are innocently lunching on a hamburger in the Hatch when one of these beasties decides to share your table. Like practically all sophomores, she is a philosophy major, and you can tell by the way her paperback copy of Plato's Republic is trembling in her hand that she is about to say Something Profound.

For example: "Now that you are in graduate school, do you know why you were born?"

You glance at your plate in discomfort. Unfortunately, you still have a whole portion of french fries to finish. No escape. You make a lame attempt to parry: "Is that an ontological or a teleological question?"

The Soph fixes a rapt stare on you through her tinted granny glasses. "What do those words means?"

"How should I know? I'm not a philosophy major."

"Well, you still haven't answered my question. Have you discovered the meaning of your birth? In the time that elapsed between your carnal beginning and your emergence into light, did your you-ness truly begin, or did your state of non-consciousness merely disappear?"

Your best bet now is to be honest: "I don't remember."

"But what is remembering? Is it a state of being or a process of the soul?"

By this time you are ready to stuff your ears with mustard in order to shut out her stream of, well, sophomoric discourse. You decide not to take such a drastic measure. "Here, have the rest of my french fries. I've got to catch a bus."

The Junior

This creature bears no trace of youthful idealism or intellectual yearning. Those traits have been replaced by a mature craftiness which enables him to indulge (as cheaply and frequently as possible) his natural appetites for sex, drugs, beer, pretzels, and sex. You need exert no effort to seek specimens of this subtype; rather, as long as you possess a warm, breathing body, they will seek you.

"Hi. Didn't John's friend's roommate introduce us two weeks ago?"

"Could be. You're a Junior, aren't you?"

"Yes. But how did you know?"

"Oh, us graduate students are smart. How have you been doing lately?"

"Just great! Let me tell you what I did last night with three friends and my roommate's dog - "

"It sounds fascinating, but I have to run off some Xerox copies, and then I have a class, and - "

"No kidding? You must never have any fun. Well, anyway, we were all smoking grass together in the dark, and suddenly Bill's chihuahua started nuzzling against my leg, and my maleness couldn't resist her femaleness, and nature's nature, so anyway Bill said - "

"Please! This isn't my cup of tea!"

"Do you like games? Let's go over to the campus pond. We can play doctor, spin the bottle, strip poker, you name it."

You quickly gather up your books and head for class. After all, you wouldn't want to shock all those Freshman who are on Zen retreat by the pond.

The Senior

This subspecies is a product of natural selection, otherwise knowns as survival of the fittest. You will have to hunt carefully amid heaps of books in the upper-level stacks of the library tower to locate individual specimens. Even then, you will need great perserverance to find one who is willing to share her exalted thoughts with you.

"By any chance are you a Senior?"

"Yes, but please make further inquiries as brief as possible. I'm inthe middle of writing a monograph on the cardia rhythms of Lombriz lombriz, the common earthworm."

Oh, so you're into biology." You grope for something intelligent to say. "Do you believe that any empirical studies to date have challenged the validity of the Klunk Hypothesis?"

The Senior arches her brows, curls her lip superciliously before replying. "Yes, I do. Arskush's classic research of 1953 — with which you are probably unfamiliar — provided conclusive evidence that the two variables crucial to the intial formation of the Klunk Hypothesis could not be reversed without necessiting further details which would obviously violate the principle of Occam's Razor. However, considering the issue from a purely theoretical standpoint, I would follow Krummsnitch in arguing that - "

"Wait! You lost me about forty words back. You know, you're too smart for your own good."

The Senior blushes with false modesty and then, adjusting her spectacles, resumes her air of scholarly aloofness. "May I ask what academic activities you will be engaged in during the coming semester?"

"I'm taking just one really heavy seminar, Boucoprology 790. Nobody but graduate students and post-docs there."

She corrects you in a lofty tone. "Not so, I also will be there."

"Well, maybe you'll find some intellectual peers there. Maybe the instructor will even know a little more than you."

The Senior laughs smugly. "Baby, I am the instructor."

Oates story misquotes him

To the Editor:

In his story on the University of Massachusetts libraries (Collegian, May 16, 1983), the reporter quoted me as saying that I could find only 30 percent of the materials for my life of Martin Luther King, Jr., in the University library. I did not say that. I told this reporter that when I sought materials held by the University library, I found about 30 percent of them missing — either lost, stolen, or hacked out of bound journals by some maniac with a razor blade. This is an infuriating problem, yet it is not confined to this campus alone.

The Collegian also suggested that, had I been at some other university, I might have been able to do all my research in residence. True, the University of Massachusetts library furnished only about 10 percent of the sources I needed. But few other institutions in the country — not even Harvard or Yale — could have offered more. Most of the documents I used to write Let the Trumpet Sound are held in special archives like the Martin Luther King Center in Atlanta.

We do have serious problems with library cutbacks, split-up holdings, and that accursed Tower (I once left the place lest I kick one of its unruly elevators). Yet, despite its diffieulties, the University of Massachusetts is a great institution, with a nationally acclaimed faculty, excellent students, able and enthusiastic librarians, and a firm commitment to creative scholarship.

Muise review the real joke

To the Editor:

Douglas Muise must not have been in the Fine Arts Center on Wednesday May 11. Because if he was there, he would have heard the roar of laughter at every joke, gesture and glance that Victor Borge made. Muise said that he looked forward to an evening of "witty craziness," it's a shame he doesn't seem to be able to appreciate the fine art of satire, an art that Victor Borge clearly is a master of. It seems it was very apparent to everyone except Muise that Borge's act revolves around poking fun at the traditionally serious piano recital, and of course opera.

Throughout Muise's "review" he constantly put down Borge's humor as lacking and unfunny. Then at the very end of the article, he seems to have changed his mind. Perhaps Muise would have gotten more of a kick out of the show if Borge had told some dirty jokes or made fun of the economy; but anyone can do that. It takes real talent to have an audience rolling without the use of such cheap laugh ploys. My hat is definitely off to Mr. Borge, but as for Muise: "There once was a man from Nantucket..."

Sign language is legitimate

To the Editor:

An article in the Thursday, May 5th issue of the "Daily Collegian" entitled: "Sign language may no longer fulfill requirement" has prompted me to write you this letter. Since I am a graduate student and not directly affected by the fulfillment of a foreign language requirement, I felt compelled as a handicapped individual to register my consternation related to ignorance of the "educated" faculty regarding deafness and language development.

One has only to visit Gallaudet College in Washington, D.C. or the National Technical Institute for the Deaf at the Rochester Institute of Technology in Rochester, New York to realize that American Sign Language is an integral part of expressive and receptive language for many of their students. Substantial research at both of these Institutions, the Salk Institute and the University of Illinois Institute for Research on Exceptional Children recognize American Sign Language as a linguistic system within the deaf culture. For those individuals who are congenitally deafened or deafened prior to the age of two and learn language which incorporates American Sign Language, there are noticeable differences that are observed in their communication when compared to individuals who learn by structured exact English in an oral or total communication environment.

I can not think of a more unobtrusive manner in which students are sensitized to a population of individuals who would otherwise remain as the hidden handicapped, away from the "mainstream." This course has been an important source of encouraging individuals to seek careers in the field of deafness, a point that should not be overlooked. American Sign Language in the deaf culture could be realistically considered as important as the folklore of Appalachia is to the American culture. If the faculty considers it an important value to preserve culture through language, at present and in the future, then the argument to not continue the course shows prejudice on their part.

Duffey speaks on graduation

To the Editor:

As we approach graduation, I would like to encourage all graduating students from all of the Schools and Colleges of the University to attend the Commencement ceremonies on May 28th. The Commencement ceremony is a special celebration across the year's events which honor the Class of 1983, and parents and friends of the graduates. We also take the occasion to invite distinguished speakers to the campus and to award honorary degrees.

Most of you are well aware of the controversy which has surrounded the announcement of some honorary degree recipients both on this campus and throughout the country. This campus is known for the diversity of its students and for vigorous debate over social issues. It is also recognized as a place where men and women of different views are treated with respect. Let that be the spirit of this year's Commencement. In doing so, we will fulfill the best traditions of the University and not detract from the graduates who are the true honorees of the day.

DC food does not exist

To the Editor:

I'm not one to bitch unnecessarily, but if I see another chicken "puck", as they're so affectionately called, I will kindly vomit in the ever-so-friendly dining commons. Why such a brash attitude you may be wondering, and the reasons are annoyingly simple.

At times I feel as if prisoners of war eat better than I do. I know the meat which the DC serves is of the highest quality, thus it's naturally quite expensive, but is it asking too much that I be served the advertised meal once in a while? Top dining common executives appear to be unable to order the correct amount of food. Now I'm terribly sorry if I am being unjustly arrogant, but come on boys, how can you consistently run out of food by 6:15?

I'd like nothing more than to continue my outcry of emotions, but Dominos has again, for the third night in a row returned my call, asking that I be in the lobby in two minutes. The pizza will arrive, I will munch it down, and I will spend the rest of the night in a state of euphoria. Not only will I be full, but I will have again spent a quick five bucks. The enjoyment I get out of throwing money away is absolutely immeasurable. With my luck tomorrow will be roast pork night. You know it's a shame a pig has to die for this feast.

Drinking is the ultimate right

To the Editor:

Each year, the UMass students are stripped more and more of their already diminishing rights. I am sure that everyone is familiar enough with the administrations rule which prohibits the use of beer kegs in dorm rooms or on campus without previous consent of the administration. This rule was established in order to prevent large scale parties from developing on campus.

The idea that prohibiting the use of kegs in the dorms to keep partying down to a minimum may have some logic behind it. But it would be unrealistic for the administration to think that all partying should or could be stopped; for this reason, small amounts of alcohol are allowed in the dorms, two cases of beer is the limit for each room.

Most college students must learn to live on a limited budget, and so it is more economical to buy things in volume. Saving money should not have to stop with the essential things in life; the new Beer Ball is a great inflation fighter, but it too is prohibited. The Beer Ball is a large, non-returnable, clear plastic bubble. It is equivelent to 2½ cases of beer in bottles or cans but costs about half as much. With the Beer Ball you are paying more for the beer, and less for the container.

When it comes to drinking on campus, the administration does not seem to understand nor care about such things as cost efficiency. The student can legally bring in just as much beer in expensive bottles or cans if it is spread out between rooms, but because the Beer Ball operates on the same principle as do kegs, it is prohibited.

It does not seem that anyone would be hurt by permitting that extra half case of beer per room which the Beer Ball contains. For this reason, I can only assume that the administration would actually be happiest if all alcohol was prohibited in the dorms. Since they realize that that would be near impossible, they intend to enforce the already existing rules to their limits, no matter how rediculous or archaic they may be.

To assume that the students could ever get the administration to change any of those rules concerning drinking on campus would be absurd; what we can do is fight to the end to save those rights which we still maintain.

BRUISEOLOGY (Polygram)
The Waitresses

By LISA MOSLEY
Collegian Staff

The Waitresses: they know what boys like.

OK kiddies, it's word association time, and in case you flunked intro psych ith the first thing that comes to mind. Ready? Here goes.

Women's Music.

Aha! I heard every last one of you grumble, "Eioww! Folk music! Birkenstock heaven!"

Well, you're wrong. And you've obviously never heard the Waitresses.

Now, before you get turned off altogether, let me stress that the Waitresses' music isn't aimed solely at women, nor does it deal with the theme of female oppresssion. In fact, the band consists of two women and three men. It's just that I'm sure women appreciate some songs such as "I Know What Boys Like" a little more than men. Patty Donahue's lyrics deal with frustrations so common to women that they're just taken for granted until they're pointed out — then they become humorous.

Bruiseology, the third release from the Waitresses, is in some ways their best effort and in some ways their worst. Musically, the band has improved dramatically since they released their debut album. Wasn't Tomorrow Wonderful was fresh and original lyricaly, but musically, it was just too dull. Every cut had that same upbeat cutesy bounce.

On "Christmas Wrapping," an offbeat song about finding true love on Christmas Even in a Store 24, the band begins to make full use of their sax player, Mars Williams' talent.

Bruiseology is musically superior to any of the band's previous vinyl. A lot of experimentation with sound is in evidence; some of it works, some of it doesn't.

On the opening cut, "Thinking About Sex Again," for instance, the changing, unmatching rhythm detracts from what otherwise could have been a light funny song.

"Pleasure", a tight instrumental, is by far the best cut the album offers. Another noteworthy cut, "They're All Out of Liquor — Let's Find Another Party," is everything that the B52's "Party Out of Bounds" should have been.

The only truly disapointing cut, "A Girl's Gotta Do," contains lyrics that are so redundant it suprises me that this band was capable of writing them:

"I've got a zillion ideas and some of them great
But nobody wants to listen
I've got better ways
To get the job done
But all you feel is threatened.

All in all, Bruiseology is a worthwhile album, for Waitresses fans and indifferent folk alike. It's fun, and sometimes I'm convinced that that's all that matters.

DOCTOR DETROIT
Starring Dan Aykroyd
Mountain Farms Four

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

"Doctor Detroit was featured in this space, but I decided against beating this very dead horse any further . . . Anybody who doesn't think movie critics pay their dues should sit through this one."

— David Laubach, Valley Advocate, 5/18/83

Well, some people have some kinda attitude, huh? This new film isn't the best written film ever projected on the silver screen, it isn't the best acted film of the century, and it isn't even that politicaly correct. I say big deal. It is a very silly film. But it's kind of fun. In fact it's possible to project just about any attitude you want on it. Not a bad deal at all.

Cliff (Dan Aykroyd) lectures his class in Doctor Detroit.

It is truly rare that one gets to see someone act as weirdly as Dan Aykroyd does at the beginning of the film. In fact, no one has acted so bizarrely relative to "normal" society since Bill Murray's landmark performance in Caddyshack. In one scene, Aykroyd is seen speed walking across town on his way to teach at college. It is so delightfully obtrusive. Part of what lends to this quality is that Aykroyd is letting his Nixon impersonation come through. Yes, a more relaxed Dick Nixon than we've seen in past Saturday Night Live episodes. Yes, I think that it takes a certain rundown, Saturday Night Live sense of humor to appreciate Doctor Detroit.

This obviously is too bad for certain types of enlightened people, but in a generation that finds themselves completely insignificant, it should not be considered unusual. Doctor Detroit is the kind of fantasy that serves as well as anything to kill time and amuse the soul. The satire on chivalry and the turnabout on the common morality play hit certain raw nerves allowing one to ignore the transition of the university to the tool of the "high-tech community" at least for a couple of hours. Well, you're probably asking, "Why doesn't this critic give me some indication as to what he is talking about. Well, the truth is that I'm tired of reviews that give away the plot, so you'll have to suffer. Anyway here's a hint. The movie takes place in Chicago not Detroit.

The movie is not all roses however. Howard Hesseman is terrible in his role as a pimp. On the other hand, James Brown is sensational (as usual). One ofthe high points of the film is when Dr. Detroit introduces JB as "the hardest working man in show business, Mr. Please, Please, Please, etc. . . ." As for the political correctness of this film, there is much to debate. Yes the film perpetuates some stereotypes but in a lot of ways it is no longer clear what is reality and what is myth. We have to face the fact that television has created the culture that it thought it was imitating. Yuk. But this is the way it is, from certain points of view.

Doctor Detroit certainly isn't the best movie put out this year, but for the time and place we live in I think it's as appropriate as anything else to have production money wasted on. Dan Aykroyd is very entertaining. Basically, this film will affect you in one of two ways. Either you'll enjoy Aykroyd and relax, or you'll cuss-me-out and leave.

Ya gotta read arts!

Have a great summer!

Commencement 1983
10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 28
University of Massachusetts at Amherst

Instruction for Participants

All Candidates
There will be no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 28, 1983. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college.

Who is Eligible to Participate?
Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1983. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master's degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 29, 1983 to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 29, 1983. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTHWEST end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities/Information Center and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early to ensure good seating. Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each undergraduate/graduate student will receive a packet of six formal invitations. Students are urged to encourage their guests to arrive early for good seating.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods
Undergraduate Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Master's Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Commencement Day, May 28, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A251, Graduate Research Center, May 2-27, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., upon presentation of an I.D. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each Ph.D. candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the university will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A251 Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $26. (Five College Doctoral Hoods will be available at $42.95.)

Rentals for Faculty
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their rental orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS WEDNESDAY, MAY 18. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds if apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Szelewicki at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for Friday before Commencement. A limited number of rooms in University housing will be available for relatives and other guests the nights of May 27 and 28. Please contact the University Summer Conference Office, 918 Campus Center, 545-3400, by May 10. Fees: $15 single/$21 double per night. There is a $5 cash key deposit — to be returned when the key is returned.

Food Services
Coffee, soft drinks, and donuts will be available under the east (section 16) and west (section 6) stands at the north end of the stadium.

The Gorilla season; it shouldn't have been

BY BILL SHEA
and JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

All that can be said about the Gorilla season past is that even the most optimistic plans can somehow be thrown astray without actual fault being establishable.

Which means that a team that lost a bunch of skni-tingley close contests that they just as easily could have won can be related to a group (well, two to be exact) of sportswriters who set out early in the evening to track down said team for comments.

Both may be close to doing what they want to do but never actually succeeded in fully accomplishing its mission.

The Gorillas had a tough year. They lost their top scorer and were conducting a job search for a replacement at the outsets of the toughest schedule of any lacrosse team in the country. True, two top scorers surfaced during the course of the season, but Greg Fisk is a freshman and Mike Fiorini is a sophomore and UMass is not the type of squad which can be dominated in scoring by younger players.

As far as the comparison, when comparing the season past to other seasons and other teams, it is always good to talk with some of the players who have been involved in the festivities in order to get a full picture of what went on.

With that exquisite notion in mind, the Collegian sports tandum tried to get in touch with a fairly large pack of Gorillas last night while they were on the prowl but, just as past plans failed, so did that of our intepid duo.

But, luckily Stuart Orns, a junior midfielder, has a Spanish exam today and had to stay home to study (Good luck Stu) and also luckily Stuart Orns knows how to evaluate this years team so an interview was found.

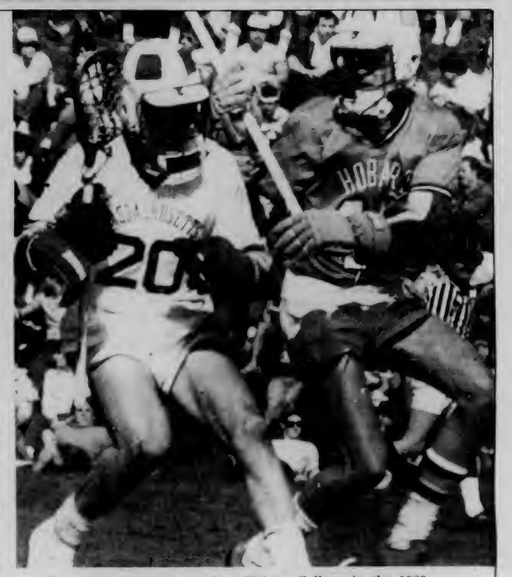
"You gotta feel for the seniors," said Orns. "They have that stigma as the first losing team coach Garber has had in 18 years and that's not deserved. They're really better than that."

And that's true. Seniors Paul Fogarty and Brad Broadwell were chosen as All-Stars for the East-West All-Star Game. Tom Curran, Dan Altschuler and Chris Benedetto formed three corners of the foundation of goalies (plus junior Gerry Moreau) that gave UMass almost too much talent at one position than some teams should be allowed.

And, names like Ernie Shapiro, Chris Schmitz, Jim Goodhart, Doug Smith and Guy Kidd will most certainly be missed when it comes time to draw up the final roster for next year's squad.

"We (the underclassmen) are luckier than the seniors in that we can come back next year," said Orns, as he thumbed through a book on Spanish grammar, "and this team WILL be back next year."

Editor's Note: The Collegian sportswriters sincerely hope that all the Gorillas who were unavailable for comment at Delano's last night had a good time and that Stu passes his exam.



Chris Schmitz moves against Hobart College in the 1983 season opener.

Dr. J holds court after a recent 76er workout. The Doc wished Jim Floyd the best.

A step above the rest: senior women athletes

By all rights I shouldn't be even writing a story for today's final edition of this semester's Collegian. This is the senior's day for saying good bye and wrapping up their illustrious careers.

Gerry deSimas

Yes, there will be some fine women's athletes who will walk out of Alumni Stadium on May 28 and become alumni and leave their teams.

The most prominent athlete that comes to mind (at least to my mind) is Jackie Gaw, the stellar two sport athlete from Springfield.

Gaw was an All-American catcher for the 28-10 softball team this spring and a All-American fullback for Kalekeni Banda's quarter-finalist soccer squad.

She was an amazing athlete who was the backbone of both teams. She won three M.V.P.'s in four years for the soccer team.

Softball and soccer teammate Debbie Pickett was also a fine two sport athlete for the Minutewomen. She played fullback for the soccer team and second base in softball. Pickett was a starter for both teams, and a vital clog for both squads.

In case you have forgotten from the fall, All-American Nina Holmstrom also boosted the women's soccer team with her high scoring play at halfback. Natlie Prosser also played exceptionally well in her last year as forward.

On the field hockey team Ro Tudyrn and Michelle Boyer led the Minutewomen to the first round of the NCAA playoffs.

Patti Philbin was the "franchise" for the volleyball team as she led a very young squad in a rebuilding year.

The basketball team didn't have any seniors on the squad.

Marlene Susienka was absolutely awesome on the golf team as she won the New England Championship and the Easterns this spring. She took six of the seven tourneys she entered. Susienka was also an All-American.

Janice Baker, who was a former Olympic (1976) trialist and Karen Knapp led the team to a third place finish in the Atlantic 10 and a very fine season.

The defending national champions, women's lacrosse team, has been bolstered by the tough defensive play of Kathy Houriahn and Tudryn. Boyer and the outstanding goalie Rita Hubner are also mainstays for Pam Hixon's 12-1-1 team that travels to the Final Four on Friday.

Mary Ann Lombardi, who was a stellar outfielder for the softball team and played some fall golf, and senior third baseman Chris Coughlin will be big holes for Elaine Sortino to fill next season.

Coughlin will be back on the field hockey team next year in her last year of eligibility in hockey. Coughlin was an All-New England pick for the softball team.

1982-83 saw some stellar performances by the women athletes and this next year looks to be just as good. But today is the senior's day.

Congrats to all of the seniors.

Sports Notices

Undergraduate students must turn in their gym clothes, towels, and locks signed out this semester to the equipment rooms (Boyden or NOPE) from where they were assigned no later than 5 p.m., Thursday, May 26. Students will be billed for items not returned through the Bursar's office.

PEOPLE - BYE BYE!!

Like all of us, I leave memories of a thousand hangovers, all nighters and roaches up the Hill and the Towers. But my best memories will be of strategically placing large thorns in the paws of the helpless royality within public higher education. It just proves the point: the bigger the school- or the system, the smaller the minds behind the desk. Marley lives.

Collegianites ready to assault world

Each semester, nearly 200 people work closely together to produce the Collegian, the daily paper at the University of Massachusetts. Pictured above are some of our graduates this semester. Their names, those graduates missing for the photo and all the other staffers who made the Collegian posible, are too numerous to mention here. To those moving on and to those remaining a hearty THANK YOU and GOOD LUCK.

Final spring issue

Danny honey, thank you for Freshman Survival 110! Good luck next year! Love, your roomie

Laura S. you know who you are. Thanks for the patience with my perpetual qucstions. It's been great working with you. Be Good.

To Jaqueline. Bet you never thought you'd get a personal in the Collegian. You're wonderful just the way you are. Don't ever change. Love your best friend Crystal and Jimbo, Lambo, Swan Man, Mickey you're so fine, Ugha, Edz, Bermuda Bob, SCM, Little Deano, Tommy two-tone and the rest of the crew from WPRC.

So Will, it's been kinda fun and kinda educational. All's I can say is do what you can. LDS.

Well Paula, I'll never know why but I'll alewys love you. Thanks for the times you amxle me the happiest guy in the world. I'll miss you everyday for the rest of my life. Bye. Love, Jim Sue K. I didn't forget you. Too bad you're not the last night, we need your loving face around to keep us content. It's gonna be a late night without you. LDS and the rest.

For Sale one double bed, one single bed, headboards, box spring and mattress. Call Nina 256-0179.

Like all of us, I leave memories of a thousand hangovers, all nighters and roaches up the Hill and the Towers. But my best memories will be of strategically placing large thorns in the paws of the helpless royality within public higher education. It just proves the point: the bigger the school or the system, the smaller the minds behind the desk. Marley lives.

Leslie P. Have fun on the vineyard. Don't worry, I'll be over to see you even if I have to swim. Love James S.

Gazelles stalk through playoffs

On to semifinals at UPenn

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

As final exam time rolls around for students, the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will have added pressure as it heads to the University of Pennsylvania this weekend to face top-seeded Temple in the semifinals of the NCAA Championship.

The Gazelles qualified for the semifinals, knocking out Harvard Saturday in the quarterfinals, 7-6. Although UMass coach Pam Hixon said a game plan has not been decided yet, she added the game would be similar to the Harvard game.

"Exam time is always a tough time to be playing," Hixon said. "Where we're only playing one game a week I think they're well rested. Temple is a fine team and we'll have to play well to beat them."

In the Gazelle's match against Temple April 29, the two teams tied 4-4. UMass had a grip on the game through the first half leading 4-2 and Hixon praised her defense for keeping the powerful Temple offense to only two goals.

In the second half, the Temple defense worked hard to contain the Massachusetts attack. The Gazelle's defense held their two goal lead through the start of the second half and settled with the tie, as Temple fired back with two goals in the last ten minutes of the period.

"We match up really well against Temple which is why it was such a low score and why it was tied," said Hixon.

"They've all been tough," she said about the competition the team has faced this season. "We've been in six games that have been decided by one goal or less and in a 14 game season that's a lot. I can't say that one game has been more difficult than another."

UMass has had an average of over nine goals scored a game this season with their lowest being four in the game against Temple. Both attack and defense will have to work equally hard as the game promises to be rough.

Attack is in good shape with three main threats around the net. Pam Moryl lead the Gazelles in scoring for the second season in a row with 37 goals and nine assists for 46 points. Last year the sophomore on attack had 38 goals and 12 assists for 50 points. Despite a broken finger at the end of the season which limited her scoring, it was a productive season for Moryl.

Linda Haytayan, who will return next year for her final season, was the teams second leading goal scorer with 30 goals and 14 assists for 44 points. Junior Tish Stevens, who was injured early in the year, came back with a fine season as third leading goal scorer with 19 goals and two assists for 21 points.

According to Hixon, Temple has had a few injuries since it met UMass and their game plan might be altered. UMass will, play the same winning style that they've had all year.

"We'll play man-to-man in a zone," Hixon said. "They have the same kind of scoring power Harvard had. We'll just have to allow as few turnovers as possible and hope we can get our scoring together.

Linda Belelander, who scored the winning goal in the 7-6 Gazelle win over Harvard, will be a key in the Gazelle quest to repeat as national champions.

The final strange cosmic journey

The small throng of spectators hushed as I prepared myself for one final throw at the championship. Ty already looked to be in full control with 375 points and Andy was gone, shut out but, I had the dice.

Jim Floyd

Bang. Bang. Bang. I moved like a man possessed. The feeling was there. The fire was burning. I was hot. And, as the points mounted, I suddenly found myself throwing triple 10's to up my total to 240 points. That, combined with my score of 275, would be enough to win, to take the title, to thrill the crowd with a dramatic comeback.

But, I had to throw the dice one more time.

I tried my best to relax. "Stay cool," I told myself, "this baby's in the bag."

I picked up the two remaining dice, clutched them for a second, and then began to rattle them around in the palm of my hand. One, two, three, I rolled them off the tips of my fingers like a basketball player lets a jump shot go. They rolled across the table and I could see the numbers rolling by. I just needed one number.

But, as Steve Martin so famously said, hooooo...Wimpout!

A couple of turns later, after the small number of spectators had filtered out of the room, Ty quietly collected the necessary points to push his total beyond 500 and collect the victory.

Everything, yes even Cosmic Wimpout, is a sport to me.

"Sport," I thought to myself, "sports. Good sports, bad sports. Sports."

And, either because the crushing blow of defeat had made me fall off into a daze or simply because seniors are prone to unforeseen flashes of nostalgia, I began to recall some of my sports memories of UMass.

And the memories were many since I had been here five full years (I told my parents I just couldn't possibly finish up all of my requirements in time when in reality I just wanted to meet more members of the opposite sex). At first all I saw was feet running, balls bouncing and hands clapping but, soon the pictures began to fall into place.

There was the time when the football team played for the Division I-AA championship. Now that was a team packed with some large human beings (no detraction to the size of any current football players please, I already have a black eye). The team lost the championship game but, in the long run, that wasn't as important as the frenzy the fans were in over the squad.

It was during that first football season that I saw how great it was when fans went crazy over supporting their team.

Then came basketball season and I saw what the other end of the spectrum looked like. The team was putrid (defined as pretty bad smelling for anyone who didn't pass rhetoric) and the fans knew it. There were no cheers, only jeers and the only applause came when center Jim Mosier was taken out because he was so bad.

I saw how bad the fans were and wished it could be like football. I wanted the Cage to be lively and supportive but, that didn't happen, not that year.

The spring came, and I found out that what the campus really wanted was to watch animals called Gorillas run around with sticks, bury people with vicious checks and chuck a little ball towards a small net with enough velocity to bust a spectator's nose if the shot was not on target. I became a lacrosse fan like everyone else.

As the years passed by I saw football level off in popularity due mainly to the fact that alcohol was banned from the stadium and the team didn't reach the same altitude it had my first year. I saw basketball take off (how many of you got turned away from the Rutgers game this year?), and lacrosse boom for awhile but fall prey to fair weather fans this past season (another spectator sport which was also hurt by a new alcohol policy and, of course, a losing season).

I saw my favorite athlete at UMass in the person of Jimmy Weller (the former lacrosse star who was an assistant coach of the Gorillas this year after graduating last year). Never have I been able to witness, in person, someone who could so totally dominate any sport the way Weller did. He may have worn number two but I thought he was number one.

I saw my favorite coach, Tom McLaughlin, who, despite resigning after two years with a record of only 16-40, still generated enough interest in his team to bring the fans back to the Cage. Basketball is on its way back and McLaughlin is the reason. For this, I will be eternally grateful.

And I saw myself seeing all of the above things and other events like field hockey games, women's hoop games, even intramural games like basketball and softball carried fond memories.

And then I saw myself at my trusty typewriter in the Collegian office. I saw myself writing up all those crazy stories which sometimes only really made sense to me and I realized that I was no different from any other sports fan on campus.

I had just had the opportunity to share the way I felt about things through a paper that everyone read even when the stuff was crazy.

So I was crazy. I was ridiculous.

I saw myself look up from the sports typewriter and smile as I pulled my final column from its roller. I knew it was my last column instead of just any column because the smile was a special smile. It said something. It showed that while I was glad to be graduating, I would always remember the fun I had had, the friends I had made and the things I had done while I had been here. It was the happiest sad smile I ever saw.

My eyes even got a little glassy and the focus began to move in on the typewriter, just the typewriter, and then I couldn't see anything.

"Why are you staring at that typewriter," Ty snapped me back into consciousness with his quizzical tone. "Are we going to play another game of wimpout or not?"

"No," I said back, still a little dazed, "I think that the game is over for me. I've got other things to do."

And, as I walked out of the room, I looked back at the old typewriter that Ty had seen me stare at and, you know, there was a piece of paper sitting in it with just two words on it: Good Bye.

AUTHOR'S NOTE: Jim Floyd thanks you for your attention.

Whimps take women's title in IM soccer

By LN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

The Whimps were hot and the Hots were wimps.

The women's intramural soccer finals ended yesterday when the Whimps smoked the Hots 4-1. The Whimps, a team of seniors, fought hard with Nancy Frye, Sue Pakcard and Collegianaire Judy Kelliher getting first period goals.

The Hots could only manage one goal by Debra Kelley in the first half.

The Whimps put the fire out of a Hots comeback in the second period when Packard scored her second goal of the match to ice the Whimps win.

In other intramural soccer action, the men's finals will begin today at 4:15 at the Boyden intramural field. The match will feature the International Radical Soccer Alternative taking on the Latin Brothers.

Yesterday, the Brothers knocked over the JA Tower of Power in a blockbuster, 2-1.

Rolfi Posadas started things off with a goal for the Brothers in the first period. Matt Tracey evened it up for the Tower of Power, also in the first.

In the second half, Manuel Perdomo kept it in the family as he scored the winning goal for the Brothers to send them to the finals.

The International Radical Soccer Alternative defeated the 14 Ways to Score, 3-1 yesterday in semifinal action.

Greg Short, Ferdie Adodoe and Cee Agu put in the three goals for the Soccer Alternative. Oscar Torretta scored one goal showing one way of the 14 ways to score for his team.

In Grad-Fac finals, Intermediates beat the Invaders by one shot, 3-2.

Steve Platt and Tony Estonislau scored in the first half for the Intermediates and Bahram Emmamolzade and Shos Daryobeigi (try to say that 10 times fast) scored for the Invaders.

Elban Denna shot down the Invaders when he put the winning goal in the net.
